Oklahoma Mine Death List Will Probably Total 60

So Far 38 Bodies Recovered, Three Men Rescued and 22 Listed as "Missing", Probably Killed by The Deadly Mine Gas.

McAlester, Okla., Dec. 18 (AP).—Braving the dread menace of fire, rescue workers who had toiled through the night today continued their grim task of removing bodies from the lower levels of the Old Town Coal Company's mine in North McAlester, where yesterday 62 miners were trapped by an explosion.

Treacherous gas, which drifted thickly through the lower levels of the mine, hampered the rescue squads of more than 200. Much of the effort during the night was directed at "curtaining off" sections of this danger area and in attempts to ventilate the mine. This was a tedious process and it was probable that it would not be completed until late this morning.

Thirty-eight bodies, swathed in burlap, had been trundled out of the mine shaft and taken to improvised morgues, where fellow workers had identified 31 of them. Three men had been rescued—carried, unconscious, from the ninth entry of the shaft—and 22 others still were listed as "missing." They, too, had died, their lives snuffed out by gas, in the opinion of Miller D. Hay, chief state mine inspector, who said four hours spent in the lower levels of the mine had convinced him none of the men would be found alive.

His inspection did not reveal the cause of the explosion, Hay said; but miners familiar with the workings were inclined to blame sparks from an electric "cutting" machine for the blast. They believed the machine uncovered a pocket of gas, which exploded. This explosion, they continued, probably caused dust, which in turn caused the greater explosion.

The mine suffered only slight damage, Hay said, but the broken and twisted condition of many of the bodies told a mute story of the great force of the detonation.

Many of the bodies were found with arms or legs broken, while others were horribly bruised or burned. Identification in many cases was difficult.

Joe Ponsella, Arnold Kessinger and Frank Gonzales, the three men taken alive from the mine, all told stories of a terrific concussion which left them dazed and deafened. Working much nearer the entrance than the others in the mine, the trio groped their way further into the entry and away from the main shaft, fearing the dread mine damp. Then all lapsed into unconsciousness until they were taken to an emergency hospital, near the scene of the disaster.

The seat of the explosion was not located on the first inspection, Hay said, but he believed it was in either the seventh or eighth entry of the mine, near the bottom of the main shaft. Bodies taken from this section were badly burned, bruised and bore other evidences of bearing the brunt of the blast.

Relatives of the men known to be in the shaft—most of them women and children—stood shivering in the biting wind through the night and gazing, speechless, at the grim, black mouth of the shaft. Barred from the morgues, where fellow miners attempted to identify the bodies, they stood hopeless, dry eyed, trained to stoicism through familiarity with the hazardous nature of the work.

Missing Pistols Accounted for

Auburn, N. Y., Dec. 18 (AP).—All 12 pistols used by convict mutineers at Auburn state prison in their outbreak a week ago have been accounted for, Acting Warden Frank L. Christian said today.

One of the 12, he said, was that of Principal Keeper George E. Durnford, slain during the riot. It was located outside the prison, where it had been carried after the mutineers had dropped it when attacked by State Troopers. A second gun was said to be outside the prison. John Bruton, one of the guards gassed during the outbreak, having given it to an officer when he was obliged to withdraw from the conflict.

Active steps are being taken to prevent a recurrence of the scenes of last Wednesday. A large quantity of gas equipment, including several long range tear gas guns, arrived at the prison this morning, according to the acting warden.

The funeral of John Martin, assistant principal keeper who died of apoplexy after the riot, was held this morning. It was attended by Major Philip G. Roosa of the State Department of Correction; Warden Edgar S. Jennings, representing the prison staff, and about 150 employes of the prison. Acting Warden Christian was unable to leave the prison at the time of the funeral.

STATE ORTHOPEDIC CLINIC THURSDAY

License of Joseph C. Berman, Inc., Revoked by Pyrke

License issued to Joseph C. Berman, Inc., 50 Grace avenue, West Washington Market, New York city, to conduct the business of receiving and selling farm produce on commission has been revoked by Commissioner Berne A. Pyrke. The order issued by the Commissioner revoking the license states "there has been failure on the part of said commission merchants to account promptly and properly and to pay consignor creditors for farm produce received by them to be sold on commission."

As a result of the action taken by Commissioner Pyrke, Joseph C. Berman, Inc., is not authorized to receive, sell or offer for sale farm produce on commission within this state. Any person who shipped farm produce to this corporation to be sold on commission and failed to receive payment may file a claim against the commission merchant's bond on a blank form which may be obtained from the Department of Agriculture and Markets, Albany, N. Y.

After complaints had been received to the effect that the corporation had failed to make payments for poultry and eggs shipped to be sold on commission a hearing was held at the New York office of the department at 53 Park place, December 9. James A. Conboy, of the Bureau of Markets, learned that on November 19 he called at the office of the concern and endeavored to arrange an adjustment of the claim filed by L. R. Holdridge & Son, of Oxford, for $702.94 for poultry shipped to the corporation; that on November 21, he called again, but on both occasions he was informed that payment was not forthcoming. He submitted two checks tendered by Joseph C. Berman, Inc., totaling $595.26, and on which payment had not been made by the bank. No explanation was made, the witness stated, as to the reasons for failure of payment on these checks. Complaints in behalf of other shippers were submitted.

H. L. Cosline, of New York, appeared, representing claimants and stated that some of them had waited three months but had not received payment.

All Day Parkers Should Use the Parking Grounds

Merchants In Congested Centers Lose Considerable Business Because Stores Are Inaccessible To Customers In Cars.

In an effort to secure the cooperation of the local folks who use their automobiles to come to work, a campaign is being conducted by the police to encourage the use of the parking grounds by these all day parkers in order that the streets may be left to short time parkers who desire to shop in the stores. Tuesday several owners who gave indications of being all day parkers were politely requested to use the parking grounds. The officer on duty placed on these cars notes stating that if the owner intended to park during the day "please use the John street parking grounds". These notes were placed on windshields in cases where the owner of the car was not to be found.

There has been an effort made on several occasions by merchants to have their employes park their cars in the parking grounds instead of in front of the stores. For a time many of the employes who come to work in cars observed that request, but soon suffer a relapse and park their vehicles either in front of their employes store or in front of some other merchant's establishment. This practice prevents the casual parker from securing parking space for a short time and is the means of shoppers going to less congested districts to make small purchases. Considerable business is lost to certain merchants in the congested districts by the practice and although there is no parking limit on Wall street and adjoining business streets the police are willing to cooperate with the merchants in a campaign of education to cause these employes to use the parking grounds.

Japan Has Scandal.

Tokyo, Dec. 18 (AP).—Japan's second major political scandal in three months came to light when the government, after obtaining permission from Emperor Hirohito, ordered the indictment of General Hanzo Yamanashi, governor general of Korea, whose regime has been charged with the acceptance of bribes.

Truck Caught Fire.

A large auto tank truck loaded with fuel oil caught fire under the flooring in the cab while on Abeel street this morning. The fire department responded to a still alarm and extinguished the fire without much damage to the truck. The truck was owned by Harp & Robinson.

Favor Hospitalization Bill.

Washington, Dec. 18 (AP).—The senate finance committee today favorably reported the Rogers hospitalization bill and added $1,959,000 to the $14,000,000 authorized for new veterans' hospital construction in the bill passed by the house.

City Holds No Title in Part of Lindsley Avenue

Common Council Adopts Committee Report That Public Necessity Did Not Require That Right of Way Be Acquired and Street Laid Out.

The rather unusual procedure of adopting both a majority and a minority report of a committee was taken at the last meeting of the common council of 1929, although it was explained that the reports, which both concerned Lindsley avenue, did not conflict. The majority report stating that the city held no title in that part of the avenue to the north of the Cordts estate and that public necessity did not require that the city acquire a right of way and lay out the street, while the minority report stated that the tree that had been felled by the Hutton Company to block the use of the street lay on city property and ordered its removal.

Recently the laws and rules committee of the common council to whom had been referred a petition signed by 212 names asking that the obstruction of the tree be removed and the disputed portion of Lindsley avenue opened to traffic, held a public meeting which was attended by Mrs. John N. Cordts and about one hundred residents of the Ponckhockie section of the city.

At the meeting of the common council Tuesday evening Mrs. Cordts was again present with about ten other residents of Ponckhockie to hear the report of the laws and rules committee which was to be made public that evening.

C. Ray Everett, president of the common council, in opening the evening session, said that in order that those who were interested in the Lindsley avenue question might leave early if desired that the regular order of business would be suspended and the report of the laws and rules committee received.

The Majority Report

The majority report of the laws and rules committee signed by Aldermen A. D. Relyea, Ray Haines, John Molyneaux and C. Ray Everett was then read by City Clerk George W. Moore. The report follows: "The laws and rules committee after careful study and investigation and upon advice of the corporation counsel, find that the city has no right or title to that portion of Lindsley avenue, northeast of the Cordts estate. We are of the opinion that there being no residents on Lindsley avenue beyond the Cordts line, public necessity and convenience does not require that a right of way be acquired and a street laid out."

The Minority Report.

Alderman Leo W. Clare, also a member of the laws and rules' committee, submitted the minority report, signed by himself. The report in brief outlined what action the committee had taken in the matter and asked that the common council direct the chief of police to notify the Hutton Company to remove the obstruction within 24 hours, or have the work done at the expense of the Hutton Company.

Alderman Clare in explaining his report said that there was no question but that the tree that had been felled by the Hutton Company lay on city property.

Hermance Makes Motion.

President Everett said that he would entertain motion to either accept or reject the majority report.

Alderman Hermance of the Third ward, moved that the majority report be rejected, and his motion was seconded by Alderman Clare.

On the roll call the motion was lost by a vote of 7 to 5. Those voting for the rejection of the report were Aldermen Hermance, Molyneaux, Mann, Clare and Burger. Those voting against rejection were Aldermen Dressel, Haines, Fox, Ostrander, O'Reilly, Relyea and Hull.

Some Discussion About Tree.

Alderman Relyea, chairman of the laws and rules' committee, said after the vote was announced, that the committee had agreed that the butt of the tree rested on city property, but saw nothing to be gained by having the butt of the tree shoved over onto the Hutton property as it would still remain as an obstruction.

"That is what my report calls for, the removal of the tree," observed Alderman Clare.

Mayor Dempsey said that if the tree was on city property it would be no trouble to have it removed.

Majority Report Adopted.

Alderman Dressel offered a resolution that the majority report be adopted. The report was adopted by a vote of 7 to 5. Those voting for adoption were Aldermen Dressel, Haines, Molyneaux, Ostrander, O'Reilly, Relyea and Hull. Those voting against adoption were Aldermen Hermance, Fox, Mann, Clare and Burger.

Minority Report Adopted.

The vote was then taken on the minority report which was adopted by a vote of 10 to 1. The alderman voting against adoption being Alderman Haines.

Clare's Resolutions.

Alderman Clare then offered some resolutions in reference to Lindsley avenue. His first resolution was that the city acquire by condemnation that part of Lindsley avenue now in dispute. Attached to the resolution were extracts from former council sessions showing that aldermen had ordered city lights installed on the disputed section. Alderman Clare contended that where city lights were installed

Troopers Verify Boy's Story of Double Shooting

Investigation Bears Out Statement of Mr. Wilbur That He Knew Nothing of Facts—Disposition of Case a Puzzle to Authorities.

Tuesday morning Sergeant James Cunningham and Trooper Weeks again visited the Wilbur home near Willow and made further investigations into the shooting of two small children of Eugene Wilbur by Lawrence Wilbur, fifteen year old boy. After a check-up among neighbors and by questioning several people who had observed the movements of the family during Monday the Troopers came to the conclusion that the story told Monday night by the boy was the true story. Every indication led to the truth of the story of the father that he was not present at the time his son shot his little brother and sister and after a thorough investigation there is no doubt but that the double fatal shooting was done by Lawrence when he pointed a Springfield rifle at his brother and sister to "scare" them. He pulled the trigger just as they were passing through a door into another room and the one bullet passed through Lulu at close range and lodged in the body of three year old Daniel. The shot came from the back and took a front and downward course.

The rifle had been used for hunting and was loaded with a soft-nose bullet which "mushroomed" as it passed through the body of the little girl.

Just what disposition can be made of the case is a puzzle to the authorities. The investigation bears out the statement of Mr. Wilbur that he knew nothing of the facts and Lawrence maintains that he had no intention of shooting the children and believed the gun was not loaded. Under these circumstances the shooting might be classed as accidental and a murder charge would be unjust. It, however, might be possible to charge the lad with juvenile delinquency in view of the fact that once prior he was in trouble. If such a charge is made he could be sent to some institution where under proper supervision he would be given a chance to make good.

Private funeral services were held today for the two children at Woodstock.

Business Men Want Committee On Civic Welfare

Also Want Sum of $10,000 Appropriated to Carry on Work of the Committee — Council Recommended Matter to Incoming Common Council.

Tuesday evening three communications, all similar in nature, were received from the Uptown Business Men's Association, the Central Business Association and the Downtown Business Men's Association requesting that a committee on civic welfare and promotion be appointed with general powers to sponsor, advance and support any plan or projeect for the growth, development and welfare of the city, and that the mayor and common council appropriate the sum of $10,000 for such purpose to be expended by or upon the recommendation of the committee, and that this amount be placed in the budget for next year.

Alderman O'Reilly offered a resolution that the common council go on record and recommend to the incoming common council the request from the Business Men's Associations. It was seconded by Alderman Mann and adopted.

Tablet for City Hall.

The building and supply committee, through its chairman, Alderman O'Reilly, submitted a report recommending that the common council go on record as favoring the installation of a suitable memorial tablet to be placed in the common council chamber in the reconstructed city hall. The report was adopted.

To Borrow $25,000.

The common council granted the request of the board of public works for permission to borrow the sum of $25,000 in anticipation of the collection of taxes.

Want Name Changed.

A petition signed by twenty-three property owners on South Fairview avenue, asking that the name of the street be changed to Fairmount avenue was read. Attached to the petition was a communication from Postmaster Walter P. Crane approving the petition.

The petition was referred to the laws and rules committee.

Council is Thanked.

Before the council adjourned President Everett said he wanted to express his appreciation for the work the council of 1928-29 had accomplished.

Mayor Dempsey also expressed his appreciation of the work of the aldermen who had worked always for the best interests of the city.

The common council was also complimented on its two years' record by Corporation Counsel Harry H. Flemming.

The council gave Alderman Everett, Mayor Dempsey and Corporation Counsel Flemming a rising vote of thanks for the work they had done during the past two years, and the council then adjourned.

Greater Interest in Christmas Home Lighting Contest

There was considerable rivalry among the members of the Electric Service League of Kingston at its regular meeting held at the Y. M. C. A. Thursday evening. Both Lowell Coles and Chester Miller who have their respective wards are getting away to a start which is to mean victory in the Christmas home lighting contest. Each of the thirteen wards is represented by a member of the Electric Service League of Kingston who is working to help his ward win the honor of being the best decorated ward in the city. A trip through a portion of the city showed that Mr. Coles' ward, number 1, has a slight lead over his nearest rival in ward number 2. This may be due to the influence of the fine display of decorative lighting which adorns the business streets in number 1; however, as this is a residential contest, the effect of the commercial displays will not be considered by the judges in making their decision.

The Electric League members representing the wards will appoint subcommittees within their respective wards for the purpose of judging the decorative lighting throughout the ward and selecting several of the better decorated homes for final decision by the principal judging committee. As there were more than 500 homes in Kingston which were decorated for the contest last year it can be seen that this preliminary work is necessary in order that each home may be considered and the work of the principal judging committee reduced to a minimum.

The contest runs from December 22 to January 1. Preliminary inspection will be made prior to December 26 and the final judging between the latter date and January 1.

Attractive prizes will be awarded to the best decorated home in each ward and to the best decorated home in the city will be given a special prize and the honor of representing the city of Kingston as an entrant in the national contest.

The humblest home may compete with the finest mansion, as it is not always the most elaborate or pretentious display which wins the prize. Originality of design or the simple dignity of a display may be a factor which will govern the decision of the judges.

This year the Electric League wishes to impress upon the people who are contemplating decorating their homes that simplicity in Christmas decoration is mostly desired. The presence of a lighted candle in a window or a few small decorative streamers with a welcome wreath is indicative of the spirit of Yuletide that the league is eager to stimulate.

Already many of the homes are beginning to display some form of Christmas decoration and the city is starting to brighten up in line with the season's spirit. There undoubtedly is a feeling of welcome and good cheer personified by decorated homes, and the comparatively small amount of extra work required to decorate your home during the Christmas season is more than rewarded by the feeling of real satisfaction and good cheer. More and more are the people throughout the whole country stimulating activities and it is hoped that everybody will enter in the contest in the season's spirit.

VISITS THREE AT HOMES AND SHOOTS THEM DEAD.

Romney, W. Va., Dec. 18 (AP).—Three men were killed early today by a man who visited each of them at their homes here and shot them down with a shotgun. Among the victims were a justice of the peace and the county jailer.

Walter Crabtree, 30, was held for the slayings. He was alleged to have had in his possession a list of five names including those of the three slain and the sheriff. County authorities said he apparently had written out a "death list" of intended victims.

H. C. Inskeep, 50, the justice of the peace, and a prominent citizen of the town, was called to the door of his home and killed instantly by a charge from a shotgun.

The slayer then went to the county jail where Ben E. Miller, 55, deputy assessor and jailer, lived. Miller was called to his door and shot. The charge blew off the top of his head.

The third victim was Asa Wolford, 28. The killer fired at him through the window of his home.

Will Be Called "The Kingstonian."

F. Gardner Clough, 6 Hurley avenue, and Abram Bedford of 254 South Wall street, have certified to the Ulster county clerk that they have ceased the use of the designation "The Kingston News" as name of a tabloid weekly newspaper, and filed another certificate under the assumed name business law that they are publishing a weekly newspaper in Kingston under the designation "The Kingstonian."

Have Recovered 52 Bodies.

McAlester, Okla., Dec. 18 (AP).—Five more bodies, bringing to 52 the total dead in the explosion at the Old Town Coal Company mine at North McAlester, were brought to the surface at 10 o'clock this morning.

To Increase Federal Road Fund.

Washington, Dec. 18 (AP).—The house roads committee today reported the Dowell bill to provide for an annual increase from $75,000,000 to $125,000,000 in the federal highway aid fund.

Heavy Damage From Storm In Northern Part of State

Seven Persons Injured In Schenectady—Miles of Wire Down, Broken By Ice Following Rain—Blizzard Hampers Traffic at Malone.

Albany, Dec. 18 (AP).—A score of cities and towns throughout northern and western New York were cut off today from communication with the outside world by either telephone or telegraph, while miles of wires lay along the highways, broken by the weight of ice which formed after several hours of rain last night.

Operators at the Albany exchange of the New York Telephone Company were instructed to report that there would be an indefinite delay in completing any toll calls to Glens Falls and points north of there as far as the Canadian border. Similar conditions prevailed as regards telegraphic communication.

Automobiles were almost a rarity on city streets today, workers either riding street cars or feeling their way gingerly along the icy sidewalks on their way to work.

Seven persons were injured in Schenectady last night either by falling or by being struck by falling branches of trees. No one was known to have been seriously injured, however.

Ballston Spa was practically isolated. Trolley cars from Schenectady and Saratoga Springs approached to either edge of the village and passengers were obliged to walk across to the other side, the cars being unable to force their way through the streets, which were littered with trees and branches. Several store windows were shattered by falling limbs and the village was reported without lights or telephone communication.

Saratoga Springs had been without lights from 10 o'clock last night, the majority of wires having given way beneath the weight of tons of ice. Branches continue to crash with reports like pistol shots and the city looked as if an army of men had done an overnight job of pruning all trees in the streets.

Rain continued to fall throughout a large part of eastern and northern New York and the weight of ice became constantly heavier.

In the uplands to the west of the Champlain valley, lower temperatures prevailed and a different variety of weather was experienced.

At Saranac Lake there was a minor power failure this morning, but telephone and electric light wires remained intact, traffic was considerably diminished because of the icy condition of the mountainous highways in that section.

At Malone, below zero temperatures of yesterday were followed this morning by a blizzard which hampered traffic and piled heavy drifts across the roads. No serious accidents were reported.

Dr. Merritt E. Van Aernem, coroner of Saratoga county, was injured seriously. The branches of a falling tree pinned him to the ground.

Industry at Saratoga Springs was at a standstill. The failure of power lines, snapped by the ice, left manufacturing plants without power or lights. Schools were ordered closed until after Christmas and Skidmore College decided to begin its Christmas vacation several days in advance of the previously fixed time.

Damage Suit Goes to Jury

Verdict Expected Today In Action Brought by William Koth, Produce Merchant, Against U. & D. Railroad.

In an action to recover damages amounting to $114.47 alleged to have been done to his truck, William Koth, produce merchant with a business on Ferry street, began suit against the Ulster and Delaware Railroad in Supreme Court Tuesday charging the railroad with backing a coal car into his machine on June 3, 1929. The case is being tried before Judge Charles E. Nichols. Arthur B. Ewig represents the plaintiff and H. H. Flemming the defendant.

The plaintiff contends that he drove his machine to the loading dock of his store, and that while the car stood there, the train went up the tracks without touching his truck. After the train had gone up the track, the plaintiff contends that it returned and that a coupling hook or some projecting device on one of the coal cars, caught on to his truck and dragged it into a switch head where it was considerably damaged. Mr. Koth further stated that his truck was parked from three to four feet from the tracks, and that there was plenty room for the train to clear. He also said that the train went past his store and toward a coal yard before it returned.

Testimony of Train Crew.

Defendants in the action, supported by the engineer and firemen of the train, contended that the truck coasted down from its parked position onto the tracks where the train hit it. The train crew stated that they stopped the train when they went up the tracks the first time toward the coal yard, because the truck was then on the tracks. They also stated that they stopped the train a second time before passing for the same reason. They said that the train did not entirely pass the truck, but that it went only far enough to clear a switch where it was to be turned into the yards. Both the engineer and fireman saw the truck when the train went up, but neither saw it on the return, the fireman stating that his view was obstructed by another truck between him and the one in the accident, and the engineer saying that he was on the other side of the train where he could not see. There were ten cars in the train. They stated that the train was brought to a stop within ten feet of the accident. The first they knew of the accident, they said, was when a brakeman signaled the train to stop. They also stated that they were not held up long, but the truck did not appear to be badly damaged and that it was moved from the tracks soon after the accident. The fireman also said that while the train was moving, the train bell was ringing. The bell is worked by hand.

Car Inspector Testifies.

Nathan Freer, car inspector for the railroad, was the last witness for the defense, as court opened this morning. He stated that the car steps on the side of the accident were bent, but under cross examination, he could not say whether the steps were bent before or after the accident.

The plaintiff then opened with rebuttal in which evidence of A. W. Gilbert, of the Chevrolet sales department, was introduced to show that if the brakes were fully on when the truck was parked it would be impossible for the car to move. Cross examined, he admitted that if the brakes were not fully on, or if the car was left standing in gear alone, a vibration or shove would cause the truck to start down the grade.

Other witnesses were brought by the plaintiff to show that the train did not stop before passing the first time.

The only question for the jury to decide, as submitted by the court, was whether or not there was something projecting from the coal car that hit the truck, or whether the truck went down the slight hill and hit the moving train. The case was given to the jury at noon, and a verdict is expected before court adjourns this afternoon.

Exploding Lamp Causes Death.

Claremont, N. H., Dec. 18 (AP).—Hyacinthe Rainville, 35, and Beulah LaRock, five-year-old daughter of Mrs. Elouise LaRock, were suffocated today in a fire which followed the explosion of an oil lamp in a rooming house conducted by Mrs. LaRock. Five other persons were injured.

Sample of City Efficiency.

Chicago, Dec. 18 (AP).—The city's incinerator—built in 1914, never used and occasionally pointed to as "A monument to civic wastefulness"—has been sold to salvagers for $800. The cost of the incinerator that never incinerated was $225,000.

Heavy Snowfall In Middle West

Kansas City, Dec. 18 (AP).—Whipped by a freezing north wind, a snowstorm of near blizzard proportions settled over much of the middle west today, with temperatures dropping to new seasonal lows in southern states. The wind and cold dispelled fog which had held southwestern airmail lines virtually at a standstill for ten days.

Rain which fell here yesterday morning froze in solid sheets of ice over streets, buildings and vegetation as the thermometer dropped to 19 degrees. Snow fell throughout the night.

Oklahoma, which has been enjoying a belated Indian summer, shivered before a prairie gale which brought temperatures of 12 to 18 degrees. In Oklahoma the mercury sank 30 degrees in 15 hours. Texas was threatened with a cold wave today.

Kansas was visited by the same blizzard but was fortified by previous similar experiences this winter.

The eastern Rocky Mountain section, birthplace of many a middle-western cold snap, enjoyed comparatively mild weather.

Shot When Gun Slipped.

Harry Roeth, son of Max Roeth of Stony Hollow, received a severe injury Tuesday when a shot-gun which he was attempting to place on a rack slipped and was discharged. With his father he had been out hunting and on the return home he attempted to put the gun away in the barn. The shot struck his left forearm and ripped away the flesh. Fortunately the shots missed the bone. He was brought to the office of Dr. H. P. Van Wagenen on John street and the wound dressed.

K. of C. Plans Boys' Program

Hudson Valley Chapter Meeting in Newburgh Approves of National Council — Seek Introduction of Columbian Squires.

The program of the National Council of the Knights of Columbus for boys was explained in detail to members of Hudson Valley Chapter of the Knights of Columbus who assembled Sunday afternoon in the clubhouse of the Newburgh Knights, by John J. Cantwey, of New Haven, representing the National Council. The meeting was largely attended, representatives being present from Newburgh, Kingston, Poughkeepsie, Beacon, Wappingers Falls, Cornwall, Peekskill, Cold Spring and other places in the district. Henry Forrestal of Beacon presided. The visitors were welcomed by Grand Knight Raymond Rafferty of Newburgh Council.

Carefully Planned.

Mr. Cantwey said that the work was being carefully prepared and already had shown splendid results. The program was intended for boys of more than 14 years and up to 18 years old. It was, he explained in no sense, a rivalry with the Boy Scouts but was intended for boys who had for the most part passed beyond the Scout age. Though the minimum age had been set for 14 years, it was not recommended that boys of 14 be generally admitted. Only those should be included who had matured rather more than normal and were ready to associate with boys 16 and 17 years old. The Boy Scout program was fully endorsed.

Columbian Squires.

To meet needs there had been formed a junior branch of the order called the Columbian Squires, who had robes, an elaborate initiatory service which was without any form of horse-play and a program of religious, physical, intellectual and social training. What he stressed particularly was that there must be experienced adult leadership.

In this connection he told of the Boyology course which had been established in Notre Dame University as a post graduate course. Already more than 50 graduates of this course were in the field and were engaged in organizing leadership in all parts of the country. In every community where the boy work had been undertaken it was welcomed and good results were being attained. The preliminary work was planned by the late Rev. Bro. Barnabas, at one time stationed in St. Patrick's, Newburgh.

The talk so impressed the members of the Chapter that a permanent committee will be organized to go into this feature with the idea of inaugurating the boy work in the Hudson Valley. Among those who strongly approved of it was Patrick T. Murphy, of Kingston, State Treasurer of the Knights.

New York—Skirts for spring, as displayed at a fashion exhibition of the United Cloak and Suit Designers, are six inches below the knee. The showing precedes the usual Paris revelation of forthcoming modes by more than a month. Up rises Jacques Worth of Paris with a 267-word telegram to the papers expressing astonishment over formattion of a fashion league by New York society women to resist man-made styles. All that he and other such creators do is to interpret women. He is applying for membership in the league.

Peiping — "Marching Through Georgia" and "Onward Christian Soldiers" are popular as wedding marches and some of the ultra modern nationalists are perturbed about it. The China Critic, a weekly published by recently returned students, demands that the government do something toward standardizing the wedding ceremony and having music more appropriate to the East.

New Light Equal To Lighthouse In Pocket

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE
Science Editor
(Associated Press Feature Service)

New York (AP)—Some of the blind helplessness of life boats at sea at night is likely to be relieved.

The army, the navy, the steamship inspection service of the department of commerce and the coast guard have under development a device to that end.

With it a man can carry in his coat pocket the equivalent of a standard lighthouse, 200 feet high, with a light of 50,000 candle power, with which to signal for help or guide rescue vessels.

The device resembles a big .45-caliber pistol, although its barrel is a little fatter. It fires like a pistol and projects upward 200 feet or more a projectile about the size of a big cannon cracker. This bursts and releases a 50,000 candle-power flare, suspended from a parachute.

The suspended light burns 30 seconds, and the pistol is designed to be reloaded with one hand so that any desired succession of lights or even a code of signals can be sent aloft.

Waves washing over the lifeboat or water swamping it have no effect on the reliability of the pistol. Its ammunition has been stored in salt water for more than 24 hours without effect.

This marine flare is a development of the airplane signal system developed by Maj. Henry B. Faber, Capt. L. L. Driggs, Jr., and the International Flare-Signal Company of Tippecanoe City, Ohio. Major Faber was dean of the United States pyrotechnic schools during the world war.

While a member last summer of the R. B. Van Horne iceberg expedition, Major Faber tested the signals in the North Atlantic one night in an open lifeboat under clear weather conditions.

The observers stood 15 feet above the water line, representing the height of the deck of a rescue ship. Sixteen miles away they saw the parachute light signals rise above the curvature of the earth, which had shut out the lifeboat torch now in use at six miles.

Both red and white flares showed distinctly. Major Faber says he believes the signals will be visible considerably beyond 16 miles, but none yet has been tested farther.

Sixteen miles means a circle 32 miles in diameter in which a rescue ship can see the parachute lights.

Visibility tests now are going on off New York harbor under winter conditions. The latest was made in a fog which swallowed up the white light of a lighthouse having a 45,000 candle power light, so that at less than three miles the naked eye could not see it.

A red parachute light on this same test showed four miles. Moreover, the red light was not nearly as powerful as the white beam, having only about one-fifth the candle power. It was one of the first demonstrations made under actual night fog conditions.

Maj. Henry B. Faber (inset) is one of the developers of a new flare which will extend the range of rescue at sea, as shown in the diagram, from the six-mile limit of the present torch to 16 miles. Below the pistol is the long tube containing the parachute flare, and the short cartridge which shoots it out of the gun.

Christmas Cheer At Rotary Dinner

Christmas carols, Christmas presents and Christmas greetings so fully took up the time of the Rotary Club luncheon at the Governor Clinton this week that there was no time for speeches except the very brief ones made by Santa Claus John Meehan while distributing the gifts, which were numerous and appropriate and which will eventually find their way to the Industrial Home.

In the absence of President Hart, S. D. Scudder presided. Visitors were present from Albany and Gloversville. The Rotary luncheon next week and the week after will be held on Thursdays jointly with Kiwanis.

WHALEN SAYS NO HARDENED CRIMINALS OPERATING NOW

New York, Dec. 18 (AP).—Reviewing the first year of the administration of the New York police department, which was completed today, Commissioner Grover A. Whalen declared no hardened criminals are operating in the city now.

"Every business must take stock at regular intervals," he said. "Our stock in trade is the criminal element. Through bringing the gangsters and other known criminals into headquarters we eliminated the criminal from New York. There are no hardened criminals operating New York today.

"The crime we have now is of spontaneous origin and is done chiefly by the youths of 17 and 18 years of age."

BROOKHART SEES FOUR BILLION MORE FOR FARMERS

Washington, Dec. 18 (AP).—The export debenture plan was envisioned today by Senator Brookhart of Iowa as a method by which the farmers of the country could gain four billion dollars more a year from their crop sales.

Speaking over the net work of the National Broadcasting Company, the Iowa senator said that five billion dollars more than the amount now received was necessary if the farmer was to get wages for his work equal to those of ordinary, unskilled labor. Proper adjustment of the tariff, he said, might produce the other billion.

Bead Embroidery Decorates Gowns

Trailing Hemlines for Long Sleeved Frocks; Paris Likes Capes.

A new tendency is to treat the Sunday evening gown as a separate item of the wardrobe, easily distinguishable from those frocks appropriate for out right evening wear and usually more formal and revealing than the afternoon costume, says a fashion writer in the New York World.

These frocks are divided, in the main, into two important types—the tailored lame dress, a shade too elegant for week-day calls, and the black chiffon or fish-net frock equipped with sleeves.

One of the most successful gowns of this genre is the creation of Ardanse, the Paris designer who sent over two or three fall models that should be familiar to any woman who takes her window shopping seriously.

This is the one with very full sleeves, embroidered nearly to the elbow with large sapphires and crystals and drawn in tightly at the wrists. The gown itself has one deep tier placed below the high waist and reaches the floor by means of several jagged points. This may be found at your favorite store, sometimes in chiffon like the original, sometimes in black fish net.

Another engaging frock is of black chiffon. The skirt has three very feminine circular ruffles set on with a black slant. The deep yoke at the neck is of ecru net embroidered with seed pearls and the sleeves are mere vestigial remnants to cover the shoulder.

A particularly smart dress in which to preside over the chafing dish is of black net in a tiny checked pattern, a single layer of which is used for the revealing yoke and sleeves. At the back a narrow shirred panel hangs straight to the floor from the grosgrain belt which fastens at both back and front with a large crystal buckle.

Black Chiffon Is Offered.

And for the older woman, who is unsure of her contours and not too fond of garments that fit like a glove, a New York house has designed a black chiffon frock, with a shirred panel to the floor in front, several trailing ends at the back and a shoulder scarf that is held in place at the left of the front by a large strass arrowhead.

The lames are lovely this year, especially on slim brunettes who have never felt any compunction about getting on the scales before all the world. The tailored lines which this fabric has surprisingly adopted bring its silhouette closer to the sort we associate with sports than most of the real sports things this year, which have a tendency to deck themselves out with demure touches of lingerie and lace and otherwise introduces femininity to the golf links.

One amusing two-piece metallic frock uses two shades of gold lame. The skirt is a circular affair, under printed in black. Over this is worn a long tunic blouse of pale gold cloth, with a band of the skirt fabric appearing below the high waistline which is accented by a narrow belt of lame brocade. Pert little cap sleeves are cut off diagonally, to the dissatisfaction of women who are dated by the position of their vaccination marks.

Blouse of Lame; Green, Gold, Red, Black; Black Velvet Skirt.

Those who do not hold with all this elaboration for a supper of cold chicken and aspic may select a frock of some less formal fabric with little touches of lame or lace to remove it from the class of dresses suitable for week-day events.

Has High Waistline.

One handsome model of navy blue canton crepe has a conspicuously high waistline, even for this season, and a long circular skirt. About the neck is a deep yoke of ecru embroidery, and ecru eyelets are scattered about in a hit-or-miss pattern all over the bodice. Another frock of moderate formality is of black flat crepe. Wide scallops made by gold eyelets are set on, in garland fashion, below the waist and are repeated on the cuffs.

A whimsical little dress in which you would feel at home in any Sabbath contingency is of black canton crepe. It has a straight panel that falls below the hemline in the back. The front is enlivened by two large bow-knots of white ermine placed one at the neck, the other at the high waistline.

Black flat crepe forms another little dress of deceptive simplicity. It has one of those long, full skirts whose design will always remain a mystery to a young woman whose doll clothes came out with the right and left sleeves reversed. At the neck and belt little tabs of crepe embroidered with rhinestones are used, and rows of tucking at the sides lend one of those dressmaking details about which much bother is being made this season.

The down-in-the-back hemline appears in many afternoon models, in spite of the fact that it presents a difficult problem to the woman who has selected her coat independently. One comely dress of black flat crepe slopes arrestingly to the rear and emphasizes the line by means of two low-placed ruffles that follow the same course. At the front is a little gilet of ecru embroidered lingerie.

Paris Features Capes.

This year's clothes, which follow the figure as closely as cloth and scissors and thread can make them, require a balancing touch which is all important. There is one saving little item that means a lot in this business of a touch of balance somewhere. The Paris dressmakers are including it in at least one-third of the costumes turned out. It is the little cape. You'll find the cape more important than you imagined in the final arrangements of this year's wardrobe.

Practically every designer in Paris turned to the little cape in just the same desperation that a lot of women will turn to it—to balance up for any lack of grace in the human figure. Considering the number of women who are round-shouldered, or who carry their heads forward instead of up in the air, and who slouch every feminine curve out of their backs, the little cape is a godsend to the fitted dress.

In evening clothes, perhaps more than in others, the little cape comes to the rescue of figures that are not perfect. In those little black chiffons and white satins that are practically nothing above the waist, tight around the hips and all fluttering down to the ankles, a woman who hasn't perfect carriage is at a disadvantage.

These are dresses designed to show off figures. For the person whose measurements do not register perfection there is a most satisfactory escape in the little cape that ties loosely around the shoulders so that it leaves the arms, throat and back bare and floats mistily around where the fitted waistline should be.

Dinner Dress of Velvet.

Augustabernard adds these little capes to many of her dinner and afternoon dresses. There is one, in a dark brown that is almost black, that goes with a short jacket which is capelike in effect. Another, of faconne velvet, has the same idea in a short full jacket that has full sleeves reaching only to the elbow, keeping the line of the cape.

In the Molyneux collection there are any number of versions of the short cape. Two stunning black coats, trimmed with black astrakhan, are quite straight up and down in the cutting, but are held tightly around the figure in the wearing. One has an entire cape, reaching to just above the elbows, of the fur; the other has big squares of fur incrusted in the short cloth cape.

More than one tweed dress, chez Molyneux, has a little cape tied around its shoulders for out-of-doors. One of the smartest ones has the cape made in the same plaits that mark the skirt. This cape differs from others in that it doesn't come together at the front, but reaches only around the front of the shoulders, then ties at the center front.

NEWBURGH'S TAX RATE FOR 1930 IS $37.12

The combined state and county, city and school tax rate for the city of Newburgh will be $37.12 per $1,000 assessed valuation in 1930. This rate became known Monday evening when the city council adopted the budget call for the raising for all city purposes except education of $559,174. The school rate is $12.26, that for city purposes is $14, and the state and county rate is $11.26.

New Orleans Bombings Continue.

New Orleans, Dec. 18 (AP).—Despite the announced intention of authorities to arrest suspects under a state law by which the death penalty may be invoked, another street car bombing has been added to the violence attendant on the New Orleans trolley strike. Of the fifteen passengers on the car four were cut and bruised. Laid between the rails, the bomb exploded under the front truck of the street car last night. The explosion was an addition to the already lengthy list of dynamitings which have occurred at irregular intervals since the beginning of the strike of local street car men last July.

VIRTUOUS BOSTON.

Boston may claim the right to stop the importation of books already in the libraries of the rest of the country and freely read, but it reached the climax of its self-righteous pose when it refused to allow an announced address by the Governor of Maryland to be advertised on its street cars, a privilege open to prize fighters. Governor Ritchie is well known to be a man of high character and unusual intellectual honesty, but he offends a part of the public by speaking out frankly in opposition to the prohibition policy. What Boston tolerates, or is said to tolerate, in spite of its extremely virtuous pose, may be learned from an article in Plain Talk by Walter W. Liggett, according to whom the old city of the Puritans is "in the grip of a grafting gang of politicians, while rapacious policemen, bootleggers, blackmailers, gunmen and miscellaneous mobs of racketeers have put every form of commercialized vice on a paying basis." The writer quoted estimates that it costs Boston $60,000,000 a year to support 4,000 speakeasies and 15,000 sellers of liquor, of whom at least 5,000 are professional bootleggers—and says further: "It is patent that the wholesale corruption in Boston could not continue without the connivance of certain key-position politicians. The police commissioner of Boston is named by the Governor . . (who) is justly blamable if bootleggers, white slavers, fences for the disposal of stolen property, dope peddlers, gamblers and gunmen are allowed to prosper under police protection—and that is precisely the situation existing in the capital of Massachusetts today."

If less than a quarter of this is true, Boston may well concern itself less with real or alleged outside iniquity and give at least a part of its attention to the scandalous conditions within its own gates.

OUR "TALKIES" ABROAD.

Some Americans who at first declared that they "loathed" the "talkies", because of the harsh and mechanical sound and sameness of the voices speaking from the film, have since been heard to admit that there has been improvement. But, while the American public may become in a measure reconciled to the new invention, foreign audiences can not reasonably be expected to accept our exported "talkies" without increasing and violent protest. An American "talkie" recently caused a riot in a Paris theatre, although a novelty to attract the curious in a country where no talking films are made.

The reason for such violent protest is simple. An exported silent film can be produced anywhere in the world merely by translating the "titles" into the native language, but to make a "talkie" intelligible it would be necessary to do the whole thing over new for every foreign country in which it is to be exhibited—obviously too large an order to be seriously considered. Foreign auditors naturally resent a screen drama which "talks" all through in English of "United-States," neither of which they can understand. And as "stars" at Hollywood hailing from Ohio or Oklahoma can not do their business over again in French, German, Italian and Spanish, it looks as if "talkies" will have to be permanently kept at home and the production of silent films continued for the foreign trade.

The Department of Labor has under consideration a plan to require a $10 visa and an $8 head tax on each alien crossing to the United States from Canada or Mexico, to meet the objection that many of them, especially the Canadians, are making their living in while residing outside of this country. But, in case of the adoption of this proposal, what if Canada should retaliate and make up a part of the loss to its citizens employed in this country by charging Americans $20 or more for a visit? Hundreds of thousands of Americans now go summering into Canada for the sake of the relative coolness, for the change of a foreign country, and for first-class beverages of the sort not readily obtainable at home.

It is stated that the Red Cross helped to rebuild 10,000 homes in Porto Rico, supplied seed to as many farmers, furnished clothing to more than 100,000 persons, and in the middle of November was feeding 511,661 of the destitute. And yet at about that time Governor Theodore Roosevelt cabled the Golden Rule Foundation for "desperately" needed help in the feeding of undernourished children, "many" of whom "are starving." Plainly the "neediest cases" the charitable are called on to assist about Christmas time are to be found this year in Porto Rico.

Why consider making a law to convict all purchasers if already a judge in Pennsylvania can sentence a man to two years for possessing a pint and the Supreme Court of Alabama can rule that the buyer is as guilty under existing law as the seller? An Illinois judge is reported as holding that even the citizen who happens to know that his friend has a bottle and does not report it is a felon. It would seem that already the Volstead act has "teeth" to spare.

Although the George Washington sails at about the same time, Secretary Stimson is said to have decided that the German liner Bremen alone is altogether available for the transport of himself and staff to England for the naval conference in London next month. Inevitably this has led to smiling inuendo by irreverent editorial scribes on the subject of the freedom of the Bremen in comparison with the "austere" George Washington.

INFECTED TONSILS IN ADULTS.

I write very often about the removal of tonsils in children, but as a matter of fact there are a great many adults who are carrying about infected tonsils.

Some do not know that there tonsils are in bad shape, and after an X-ray of teeth and removal or treatment of those infected, wonder why they still feel so lazy or still have pains in muscles and joints.

Other adults know that their tonsils are infected, realize that their joint condition is due to them, and even that organic heart ailments frequently follow attacks of tonsilitis.

And yet they refuse to have their tonsils removed.

Why?

Because they have heard that the removal of tonsils in adults, particularly at or past middle age is attended by a serious reaction, is very often dangerous, and the recovery takes a long time.

As a matter of fact my own observation has been, and now we have the authority of our throat specialists, that there is less local reaction and less discomfort with these older persons than those twenty to thirty years younger.

Of course a middle aged or older person is perhaps likely to have other conditions such as heart, kidney, liver, or other ailments, but these would have to have previous treatment and care before the tonsil operation is performed.

In older persons it is frequently advisable to use a local anaesthetic, and as the specialist can talk quietly, encouragingly, and explain the simplicity of the procedure—like removing the kernel from the nut, the patient does not get unduly excited and the operation goes on without any trouble.

Further, as the removal of tonsils is now considered as urgent, and as important as the removal of the appendix, there is more care before, during, and after the operation, than there was some years ago.

The patient's blood is tested as to whether it will coagulate or clot properly and in a short time; his nervous symptoms are taken into consideration; his body is built up as much as possible.

Immediately after the operation, he is made as comfortable as possible, and in a few hours a glass of water is given at least every hour.

After he leaves the hospital he is advised to take things easy for a few days.

Remember, bad tonsils are dangerous, and their removal is now attended with very little risk.

The hottest place in the world is the town of Azizia, in Tripoli. This is located about 25 miles south of the Mediterranean. The Secret of Mohawk Pond

Kitbarata [illegible] partly obscures the [illegible] mystery that has clouded Peggy Prescott's life at Fox Ledge. Jim rescues her from a fog that imperils her life and then gains her promise to wed him. Julia reveals to Peggy that Lieut. Edgar Stanton committed an army camp during the war at the northern mooring of Mrs. Annie Eccles and then fled after her husband discovered her. Stanton urges Sheriff Brock to arrest Snedeker, revealing fact he overlistens "night blackmail" and is a "clever faker." Jim warns Hendrick at Larchfield "to watch out."

Chapter 17.

ATTORNEY CHASE APPEARS

THE rattle of pots and pans ceased and Julia looked inquiringly up from her wet dinner dishes as Peggy came into the kitchen.

"Hasn't yo' heard yit fum Mister Jim?" she asked sympathetically.

Peggy shook her head.

"No. Are you sure, Julia, the milk and cream were not left this morning from Echo Farm?"

"Yassum; I looked eberywhar an' de onlies' thing I foun' was de ole empty pails I put out las' night before Mister Jim done lef'. Has yo' tried telephonin'?"

"Yes, and I can't even raise the operator at East Cornwall."

Peggy came farther into the room and picked up a dishcloth.

"I believe the storm last night must have blown down some of the wires. Do you mind going after the mail?"

"No, ma'am."

Julia moved about the kitchen with more spryness than heretofore.

"Why don' yo' come, too, Miss Peggy?"

Again Peggy shook her head. "I'll finish the dishes," she announced; "don't stop to prink," an affectionate smile robbed the words of any sting, and she pushed Julia toward the closet where hung her coat and hat. "And, eh, you might ask Deborah about the—eh—milk."

Five minutes later, Julia was hurrying down Mohawk Lane.

Peggy did not linger in wiping the remaining dishes and stayed in the kitchen only long enough to put them back in place in the corner cupboards. Once more in the living room she went over to her uncle's desk on which the two Bibles lay.

Countless times since she had discovered the enigmatic underscored phrases with their black arrows on the margin had Peggy fingered the pages of the musty Bible she had found in the basement.

She had tried to discover the reason for the absence of the two pages that had been neatly cut out without success.

Her eye fell on the small Bible which she had found in her uncle's desk. It was a handsome book with heavy flexible leather back and gold edges. The fly leaf caught her eye and she read the name inscribed thereon with interest—"Martha Sinclair Prescott." Evidently the Bible had belonged to her uncle's wife.

Just below the name was written in stylish penmanship: "From her loving niece, Anne Sinclair Beale." The date followed: "Christmas, 1912."

Anne Sinclair Beale—Peggy gave a start and the Bible slipped to the floor with a thud. Hadn't Julia told her about a Mrs. Beale?

She turned her attention to the large Bible. It took her some moments to find the pages filled with genealogical data—at the very bottom of the vital statistics was the last entry in her uncle's handwriting:

"Martha, beloved wife of Herbert Prescott, died in Paris, January 13, 1913," while above it, in cramped lettering, entirely different from her uncle's writing, was the terse statement: "Married, in Paris, Anne Sinclair, my niece, to Julian Beale, of Mount Holly, Warren County, Virginia, November 15, 1912."

Peggy sitting in the large overstuffed chair bowed her head and tears came to her eyes.

Then Anne Sinclair, her uncle's niece, was the woman whose life had been ruined by Stanton!

She, Peggy Prescott, all unknowingly, had avenged Anne.

Peggy closed her eyes in thought. She must have been nine years of age when the sordid marital tragedy happened. She was certain that her mother had never alluded to Anne Sinclair. She doubted if her mother realized that Anne Beale was a connection by marriage.

Peggy's head ached with an intolerable, throbbing pain. She wished Julia would hurry back; above all she longed for Jim. To pour out in his sympathetic ear all her doubts and fears—ah, if he would only come!

The rat-a-tap-tap of the brass knocker on the front door brought her to her feet with a rapidly beating heart. A glance in the old Sheraton mirror on the wall convinced her that her hair was becomingly arranged even though she was dabbing powder and rouge on her cheeks. Jim must not find her with white cheeks—why, he might think she had grown old and wrinkled overnight!

As Peggy swung open the front door, she grew sick with disappointment. The man confronting her, visiting card in hand, was not Jim. Swiftly she struggled to recover herself and give no inkling of her feelings.

"Come in, Mr. Chase," she exclaimed cordially; then, taking another and more comprehensive look at him and his clothes of fashionable cut, and seeing the extended visiting card: "Oh, it's—"

"The other twin," explained the newcomer, smiling broadly and dropping his hat and the visiting card on a convenient table before shaking hands.

"You and Mr. Aquila are as alike as two peas," said Peggy, looking at him with deep interest. "I never saw such a marvelous likeness!"

"Like a comic strip," he smiled. He clasped his hands together with a slight slap and rubbed them up and down. "How are you making out, that's the question?"

There was a certain hard note in his voice, belied however, by his kindly expression, and Peggy hesitated in some confusion.

"I am quite all right," she answered finally. "I twisted my ankle a day or so ago, but that is a minor consideration compared to—to—the tragedy. Oh, Mr. Chase, if Uncle Herbert hadn't left a gun around, it might never have happened."

"My dear child," Chase touched her gently, sympathetically on the shoulder. "What you did was in protection of your home; a far greater tragedy might have happened if Stanton had gained undisputed entrance—he was not a good man—one can only surmise—"

Peggy crimsoned to the roots of her hair. Chase was presenting a viewpoint that had never entered her head.

"You need not fear a fair trial," continued Chase; "no jury will convict you."

"I haven't asked you to sit down, even!" she exclaimed. "Not to mention offering you a cup of tea."

"No, not a chair," he protested, as she indicated one near her uncle's desk. "Let me roam around, if you don't mind; a nervous habit of mine."

Chase whirled about as he spoke and strode up and down the living room, taking in its handsome and unusual furnishings.

"Your uncle spent a lot of money on this place," he said, coming to a pause by the side of her chair. "It represents much capital invested in an inaccessible spot."

"Oh, it's very beautiful—the surrounding country—"

"With little or no market value." He temporized his sweeping condemnation with a friendly smile. "That is only the point of view of a confirmed New Yorker and not to be taken seriously by a Connecticut Yankee."

"I'm a Virginian, transplanted," she protested quickly, "but I love the Connecticut hills; perhaps because my father's people came from here."

"Just so."

Chase spoke absently, his attention still claimed by first one handsome piece of furniture and then another. Again he paced the room, this time to examine a painting on the wall.

"A genuine Corot," he exclaimed; "my word, you have some treasures here."

He pointed to a mahogany chair. "That I know was copied from one in the Metropolitan museum; but these other things," waving his hand with a sweeping gesture to include most of the room, "Mr. Prescott combed Europe for some of them."

"That's very interesting," commented Peggy. "I am glad to know something about the articles in this room—the whole house is filled with beautiful furniture, paintings and tapestry."

"Good."

Chase dropped unceremoniously into a seat next to her.

"My dear child, I am stressing the value of these belongings of yours because," he hesitated, "well, frankly, because I have bad news for you."

Peggy half rose.

"My father?" she faltered. "What of him?"

"Nothing; I don't mean that kind of news." Chase cleared his throat. "Now, sit down, and keep calm."

"I will, but please go on."

"Well, to make an unpleasant matter short, Miss Prescott, this is your inheritance—Yew Lodge and all that it contains and nothing more."

Peggy's fortune vanished! Attorney Prescott explains in tomorrow's installment.

Cave of Bats

Because of the thousands of bats that inhabit it, the Carlsbat cave in the Guadalupe mountains, southeastern New Mexico, was formerly known as "Bat Cave." It is said that at dusk each evening these little mammals come out through a large natural opening, at times in such numbers that they look like smoke from a chimney, and for three hours pour forth in a steady stream; then in the early morning they return and with incredible swiftness fold their wings in midair and dart into the opening.

Woman's Devotion to Duty

It is related that in San Francisco harbor, when a fog bell became disabled, the woman keeper struck the bell by hand for twenty hours and thirty-five minutes, until the fog lifted. Two days later she stood all night striking the bell with a hammer during a dense fog.

Mrs. Walter Dunlap of Bowne street, who has been confined to her home for the past ten weeks with a broken hip is gaining nicely. Not Always a "River"

The stream under the Natural bridge, Virginia, is dignified with the name of Cedar river. It is, however, for most of the year little more than a rapidly flowing creek.

Seems to Be "No New Thing Under the Sun"

It seems possible to find almost any desired object in an ancient tomb. The latest discovery is that of a slipper, that handy device for fastening tobacco pouches and galoshes, which was unearthed in a Viking burial ground near Tilsit, East Prussia. The modern age has known this contraption less than 15 years, and credits it to a Swedish engineer. Safety pins, supposedly a modern convenience, have been found in ancient Pompeii. A rubber shoe was reported from a tomb near Budapest, although the first historical account of rubber is in Columbus' story of his second voyage. Ur of the Chaldees yielded powder puffs and eyebrow tweezers, and the royal lipstick was found to have been laid to rest with the widow of King Tut.

The preacher of the Ecclesiastes spoke wisely when he said, "There is no new thing under the sun." It would not be surprising to hear of Caligula's platinum-plated radio set being fished out of Lake Nemi's mud, or Mrs. Noah's electric washing machine reposing in the debris of the ark.

In Memoriam.

In sad and loving memory of our dear mother, Mrs. Cornelius Adams, who passed away one year ago today, December 18, 1928.

How we miss you mother darling,
Every day still more and more,
But God grant some day we'll meet you
On that blissful heavenly shore.
When the evening shades are falling
And we are sitting all alone.
In our hearts there comes a longing,
Oft and oft our thoughts do wander
To her grave so far away,
Where they gently lowered her body
Just a year ago today.
BEREAVED SONS AND DAUGHTER.

In Memoriam.

In memory of Floyd Long, who died December 18, 1925.

Sacred to the memory of our dearly beloved son and brother, Floyd Long, who passed away suddenly one year ago today, December 18, 1925.

From the world of grief and trouble
To the land of peace and rest,
God has taken our dear Floyd
To a place of happiness.
In our hearts your memory lingers,
You were faithful, fond and true,
There is not a day, dear Floyd,
That we do not think of you.
Thinking of the days gone by
When we were all together,
Of all the joys and happiness
That now are gone forever.
But we are thinking of you every day.
Thinking of the past, picturing you in memory,
Just as we saw you last, you left
Behind some broken hearts.
That loved you so sincere,
We never did, nor ever will,
Forget you, Floyd dear.

THEY NEEDED A STEPMOTHER

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

IT WAS one of those afternoons when a small town girl with a vocation has nothing to do. Frances Knight, lounging in the porch hammock trying to read a slow-moving story, welcomed the sight of her friend, Bertha Gale.

Bertha looked hot and tired and very cross. She sank into the hammock beside Frances and wiped powder and perspiration indiscriminately from her face.

"Ted's awful," she signed. "I can't do a thing right with him. Our housekeeper and Dad both leave him to me. I'm afraid of Ted when he's mad. He was horribly mad just now. He told me to go where it's much worse than it is here this afternoon. What that boy needs is an animal trainer."

"This trying to get along without a mother is a mess," Frances said. "We've got everything in our home to make us happy except a mother."

Bertha gazed into space. This was one of the times she felt more motherless than at other times. Her bout with her boisterous brother had disheartened and disheveled her.

"Look! There goes Miss Susan driving her new car!" exclaimed Frances. "She's wearing the same new hat she's had this season."

"She's a nice looking woman for her age," Bertha said. "She was a girl when our mothers were. Funny she never married."

"She didn't have to. She's got oodles of coin."

"Nevertheless she ought to marry. She's depriving some good man of companionship. That's what Dad says."

"Mine, too!" Frances bounced on the cushions. "Bertha! I've got an idea!"

"Keep it. I don't need it. I've got one myself," retorted Bertha.

Bertha went home rather hurriedly. Frances was glad. Snatching her scissors, she dashed into the garden and began cutting nasturtiums.

"Here! You get outen there! I want them to go to seed for my pickles!" shouted the housekeeper. Mrs. Bird, thrusting her dust-capped head out of the window to see what that girl was up to."

Frances paid no heed. After all, she was the real mistress of the house. When she had cut a nice bunch of nasturtiums she scooted down the street toward Miss Susan Burke's.

Miss Susan had shut her smart roadster in the garage and sat down on her broad veranda with some sewing.

"For me?" She seemed a little surprised at this unusual attention from her young neighbor. "How nice! Won't you have a seat?"

Frances felt a sense of elation. But she bit her lip with vexation when a few minutes later Bertha appeared. Bertha bore a large book in a gorgeous jacket. Bertha's father belonged to a book club and this book had just been handed in by the postman. Miss Susan looked a trifle embarrassed, but she accepted the volume.

Frances perceived that Bertha and she had the very same idea. It was most unfortunate. Frances made up her mind that Miss Susan was just the kind of mother she wanted. Dad was fairly well off, but they had to be a mite careful of expenditure. Miss Susan was rich. If only she could be persuaded to marry Dad, Frances argued mentally, she'd probably let them move into her house. What a wonderful home for a young girl! Think of the parties one could have there! Dad was good looking and agreeable, but Frances had a feeling that he'd need her help if he was going to get Miss Susan. Of course, Bertha's father was well off and good looking, too, but he had a drawback. Not Bertha. Ted. Ted was a horror.

Every day Frances plied Miss Susan with favors. Frequently she encountered Bertha bent on like missions. Relations were strained between the former chums. Bertha took succulent young vegetables when Frances took flowers, she took books when Frances took fruit. She praised her dad to the skies. Ted was going to be just like him—in time.

One afternoon Frances sought Miss Susan with an assurance she had not before known. That morning she had gone for a ride with Miss Susan in the eight-cylinder roadster. She felt a delightful new possessive sense in the car, the wonderful house, and Miss Susan herself.

On Miss Susan's veranda sat a small, brown, ugly young girl, who was toiling over some breadths of coarse blue-checked gingham. Frances' nose went up, Bertha's likewise. They sat down with their backs to the "obstacle." Judy Hoy wasn't in their crowd. She lived in "rooms" and her father came home at night in overalls, looking hot and soiled. Besides, Judy had twin sisters, Jane and Mary, who played in the street simply because there wasn't any other place for them to play. Judy was younger than either Frances or Bertha, but she and her father "managed," with the help of a woman who came in once a week, to dig out the thickest of the dirt.

"I'm teaching Judy to make dresses for the twins," Miss Susan said. "That looks very well, Judy. I'll just run in and stitch it for you."

"You've got nerve, asking Miss Susan to teach you to sew," Frances said scornfully.

Judy lifted big brown eyes. She crossed her thin arms and legs in an attitude of defiance.

"I didn't ask her. She offered," she returned.

The tea wagon was heavily laden that afternoon. Judy ate as if she'd never seen food before. Frances thought contemptuously. But Miss Susan was beautifully courteous. She even sent a bag of cakes to the twins.

"Shark," Frances grumbled to Bertha as they walked away together. Their antagonism toward Judy made them forget their own mutual jealousy.

Judy continued to be seen at Miss Susan's. She began to dress rather like most people. The twins, also, were really cute. Ordinarily Frances couldn't have kept her hands off them, determine they example of healthy babyhood. But here was Judy's sisters and possessed them.

The time came when Frances felt she must speak to her father. She had the case before him. They needed a mother. She'd picked Miss Susan; father would have to do the rest. He listened and laughed heartily.

"Susan wouldn't have me. I asked her before I met your mother."

"Then she'll marry Mr. Gale!" grieved Frances.

"Not on your life. He, the nearest, was one of her old suitors. Listen, Fran!" Mr. Knight pulled his daughter down on his knee. "Can you keep a secret? Susan is going to marry Dick Hoy—"

"Not Judy's father! Oh! Oh!"

"He's a better man than Gale and I put together," Mr. Knight said earnestly. "I hope, my dear, when you get ready to make you'll pick as fine a husband as Susan has."

Carved Rock Temple Is Marvel of Sculpture

On the rock floor of a great open pit cut sheer into the top of a hillside in south central India in a 27-foot plinth walk, a colossal frieze of over-size stone elephants. Shoulder to shoulder they stand, appearing to bear on their stone shoulders the weight of the rock temple which rises above them. Five hundred and forty-six measured feet they run, slightly more than a tenth of a mile. They have been called by those with standards of comparison the greatest achievement in rock sculpture in the world.

They are perhaps the most striking single feature in an extraordinary architectural achievement of ancient India—the great rock temple of Kailasa at Ellora village in the territory of the Nizam of Hyderabad, today the newest wonder of the ancient world.

About the time of Charlemagne, around 800 A. D., King Krishna I came down somewhere from the North into southern India and thrust out the previous rulers of the Deccan. As a definite thank offering to his god, he conceived and started one of the most magnificent temples, stupendous in plan and brilliant in execution, that the whole long history of religious enthusiasm can produce. Down to the last, least detail it was sculptured out of the living rock.

There is not a square foot which is not covered with sculpture or bas reliefs, not one bare wall, not one undecorated ceiling. They are all closely covered, either with huge over-size reliefs or with minute lace-like sculpture telling in Indian fashion all the detail of the endless escapades of the multifarious gods of the whole Pantheon. It is known as the Kailasa, after the celestial palace of the great god Siva, offering a physical counterpart for his honor and delectation.

The average tourist first comes upon the Kailasa with all the suddenness of an approach to a precipice. It is as unexpected and as unmarked as the opening of the Grand canyon in Arizona. One moment you see nothing but hillside, and the next the great pit is before you; and you're gazing down in the clear Indian air at a vast pattern of sculptured architecture that is too bewildering at first to be grasped as reality.—Exchange.

Suggestive

Two women were out shopping when they happened to pass a shop which had a pig's head with a lemon in its mouth displayed in the window.

One of the women exclaimed:

"Good gracious! That reminds me—my husband asked me to take him home some tobacco."—Stray Stories.

No Brains

Jack—I didn't know they could be as dumb as she is and still live.

Jim—Me neither. She saw "Bear Market" in the paper and asked me if there was such a big demand for bears that they had to have a special market for selling them."

Optimistic

Applicant—Well, 'ere I am to see about that job you advertised.

Boss—I see. Do you think you can do the work?

Applicant—Work? Lor' lumme, I thought you wanted a foreman!—Answers.

Not So Good

First Golfer (telling fish story)—He was about as long as that last drive of yours.

Second Golfer—Oh, really!

"Yes, so I threw him back."—Pearson's.

A Vocation

Mrs. Worrymore—My little boy has St. Vitus' dance terribly. I don't know what to do with him.

Boarder—You might get him a conductor's baton and have him lead a jazz orchestra.

"Has it ever actually rained cats and dogs?" asks an inquirer of a western editor. Well, with planes carrying race horses and gorillas, we wouldn't be surprised.

An American postage stamp has been sold at auction for $2,000. It is said to be a very rare type, similar to the one the letter-writer says is enclosed for a reply.

"The International congress of psychology finds that swearing among girls is increasing."—Washington Post. A person does not have to be a psychologist to notice that.

AMERICAN WOMAN PRESERVES RUNNYMEDE MEADOW

London, Dec. 18 (AP).—An American woman has preserved for the British people one of their most historic sites in the purchase and presentation to a national trust the historic Runnymede Meadow, scene of signing of the Magna Charta.

The American woman was Lady Fairhaven, formerly Clara Leland Rogers, daughter of H. H. Rogers, the oil man, and widow of the Englishman Urban Broughton.

Broughton was destined for a barony but died before the honor could be gazetted. The title therefore was granted to the son and Mrs. Rogers was given the status of a widow of a baron. The title was drawn from Fairhaven, Mass.

Tokyo, Dec. 12 (AP).—The seismograph at the Tokyo Central Observatory today registered a distant heavy earthquake lasting two hours and believed to be in the direction of the Aleutian Islands.

The earthquake registered by the Tokyo seismograph evidently was the one which shook the east-west recording needle off the roll of a similar instrument at the University of Washington yesterday.

The whole question of disarmament by land, sea and air ought to be considered at Geneva, according to the government's view.

PLANTHABER'S "STOLEN" CAR TAKEN BY MISTAKE

The theft of the Chevrolet coach of George Planthaber, the Strand grocer, was reported to the police department Tuesday afternoon. Later it was ascertained that the car had not been stolen but taken by mistake. It developed that Nathan Feldman of this city, has a car of similar make, and he helped himself to Planthaber's car, thinking it was his own. When he discovered his mistake a short time later he returned the car and obtained his own machine.

MABEL NORMAND FIGHTING TUBERCULOSIS

Where To Buy Additional Seals.

For the benefit of those who wish more seals than they received in the letters sent out and also for the benefit of those who wish to buy less than a dollar's worth, The Freeman has been asked to say that these extra seals may now be purchased at 207 Wall street, corner of Maiden Lane. In other years there have been seals for sale at the post offices, but owing to the necessarily continuous opening and shutting of doors in the lobby spaces of the postoffices where the seals have to be sold, so many workers have caught bad colds that the plan has been abandoned this year. As stated above the one place where seals may now be bought will be at 207 Wall street, office of Dr. Mary Gage-Day.

DeMolay Confers Degree on Ten

Colonial Chapter, Order of DeMolay, conferred the DeMolay degree on ten candidates Monday evening at the chapter rooms and got off to a fine start for the coming year as six petitions for new members were read. This is evidence of the fine work of the members who are striving to make this a banner year in the history of the local chapter. A DeMolay membership is a worthwhile gift to some boy for Christmas and an installation of many more petitions being given out after the holidays initiation will be postponed to afford time to take care of them. Anyone having information concerning qualifications for membership, should speak to any DeMolay, or communicate with W. Frank Davis 7 East St. James street.

Aside presenting the DeMolay degree, the chapter also elected officers for the first six months of 1930 as follows:

Master Councilor—Richard K. Bailey
Senior Councilor—Alton C. Blackwell
Junior Councilor—Frederick Spalt
Scribe—Earle Tongue
Treasurer—Harry Lebert

These officers will be installed at a public service held the first Monday in January. Plans will be announced later, but past attendance at these public installations has been so gratifying to the chapter that nothing will be left undone to make this the most interesting and enjoyable affair yet held.

On December 29, at the Albany Avenue Baptist Church, the Rondout Commandery will attend in a body and last night the DeMolay boys voted that they also would accompany the Commandery and so reciprocate the courtesy extended on different occasions when the Commandery attended services sponsored by DeMolay. Every member is asked to attend, and will receive a letter soon requesting his presence. Those not connected with either of these organizations are invited to witness this service.

Those who were not at the meeting Monday and who are taking advantage of the Salvation Army's courtesy in permitting the members of the Chapter to use the basketball court one night a week are asked to take notice that the time has been changed to Tuesday nights, at 8:30 and members are not privileged to use the court on Thursday any more. This is only one of the many little privileges which count up to something that are available to members of the Order through its influence in the community.

Last year the Chapter was honored by having one of its members win the coveted "Representative DeMolay" pin. He was one of six in the whole state of New York who received the award. This year the members are out to make this local chapter the strongest "Representative DeMolay" group anywhere and their determination is shown by the fact that several have already obtained literature concerning the examinations, from Dick Bailey. It doesn't cost anything to try.

Anxious

Now they are telling the story of the farmer who motored to New York. Everything was all right until he reached the city itself and then he found himself driving round and round until at length he deliberately drove through a traffic signal and brought an irate policeman to his side.

"I'm trying to find a place to park my car," he wailed. "Where in heck is this here Park avenue, anyway?"

Can't Decide Where to Send Deported Man

Portland, Ore.—A modern Philip Nolan, Hale's famous "man without a country," is waiting in the county jail for some place to go. He is Sieve Kindred, Oregon's "man without a country" as far as immigration authorities are concerned. He was born in Poland, at least it was Poland when he was born, but after the war when the map of Europe was remade, Kindred's home town was in Roumania.

These two countries, Poland and Roumania, have not decided which, if either, is going to accept Kindred upon deportation from the United States for illegal entry.

Street Hazard At Holiday Time

Albany, Dec. 18 (AP)—Declaring that a state of mental excitement prevalent in the holiday season creates an additional hazard to both motorists and pedestrians, Charles A. Harnett, commissioner of motor vehicles, in a statement today appealed to drivers to be careful.

Special care, he said, is needed at this time of year because "the streets are thronged with motor vehicles and pedestrians, all intent on making their Christmas purchases, and little thought is given to safety on the streets.

"It is my earnest request that safety be included in the holiday suggestions, and that safety doctrines be given to both children and adults as a holiday greeting."

Inn of Dickens' Time

The old inn in Southwark, England, made famous by Dickens in Little Dorrit, is over three hundred and fifty years old, and was in its day one of the most famous coaching houses in England. Its long, low parlor, the wooden balcony's balustrading hardly more than six feet above the ground, and the old-fashioned bedrooms leading on to it still remain. In many of these bedrooms there are still in use the great four-poster beds of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries.

No Word from Royal Air Fliers

London, Dec. 18 (AP).—Hours passed today without word from the two royal air force officers who yesterday at dawn began an attempt at a non-stop flight to Capetown, South Africa, about 6,000 miles distant.

The two men, if all went well, should have been in the most hazardous lap of their journey and there was some feeling something may have happened to them since they had promised to communicate through their radio every four hours.

The air ministry said this morning it had received no message from the two, Squadron Leader A. G. Jones-Williams and Flight Lieutenant A. H. Jenkins, since yesterday afternoon, when they reported the plane 50 miles northwest of Sardinia.

If nothing has happened it was estimated the plane must have crossed Tunis and be somewhere over the French section of the Great Sahara desert. Besides the great natural hazards of this expanse of sand and rock, a forced landing might place them at the mercy of marauding bands of Arabs. The men were equipped with sporting rifles for their protection.

Peculiar Murder Trial Nears End

Mountain View, Ark., Dec. 18 (AP)—The end of the Orville Franklin murder trial and the jury's answer to the question of whether Franklin is dead or alive was in sight today.

The man who says he is Franklin was ready to take the witness stand in behalf of four men accused of slaying Franklin and there were indications that all testimony would be completed and the case given to the jury by nightfall.

Defense counsel said the man claiming to be Franklin would be their witness of the day. He has been identified by his mother, Mrs. Lily Baker, as Marion Franklin Rogers a child by a former marriage. She said he was a former inmate of a hospital for nervous diseases and the father of three children.

At the conclusion of the state's direct testimony last night, the defense moved for an instructed verdict of acquittal on the ground that the state had failed to establish the corpus delicti. Judge S. H. Hone overruled the motion and the trial continued.

The state's case was built largely on two witnesses—Tillar Ruminer, 17-year-old mountain girl, who said she and Franklin had planned to marry on the night last March he allegedly was slain, and Reuben Harrell, a deaf mute youth, who had to testify through an interpreter.

Tillar denied that the youth here, who says he is Franklin, was her sweetheart.

MODENA

Modena, Dec. 17.—The dance held at the Community Hall Friday evening netted fine receipts for the benefit of the fire department. Despite the inclement weather a splendid sized crowd was present and an enjoyable time was reported.

Teachers at the Modena school are rehearsing the students for a Christmas entertainment to be given in the near future, date to be announced. The presence of all is desired, thereby encouraging children and teachers for the commendable work in the schoolroom, and the results of careful training.

That the Christmas spirit prevails is evidenced by the gala decorations displayed throughout the vicinity. D. E. Grimm's store of general merchandise presents a Christmasy appearance with its window decoration of holiday attire.

Arthur Coy has been assisting at the post office during the absence of Paul Weber, who was called to Connecticut by the death of a relative.

Mr. and Mrs. Myron Shultis were visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Taylor at Port Ewen, Saturday.

A. D. Wager, who has been serving on the jury at Kingston during the past week, spent Tuesday night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Philetus Hendricks at Stone Ridge.

Mrs. Ora Cross lost one of her work horses. It was hooked to death by a bull. Mrs. Cross seems to be in hard luck as this fall her valuable registered bull was hit by a truck and his leg broken, and was sold at a big loss to a butcher.

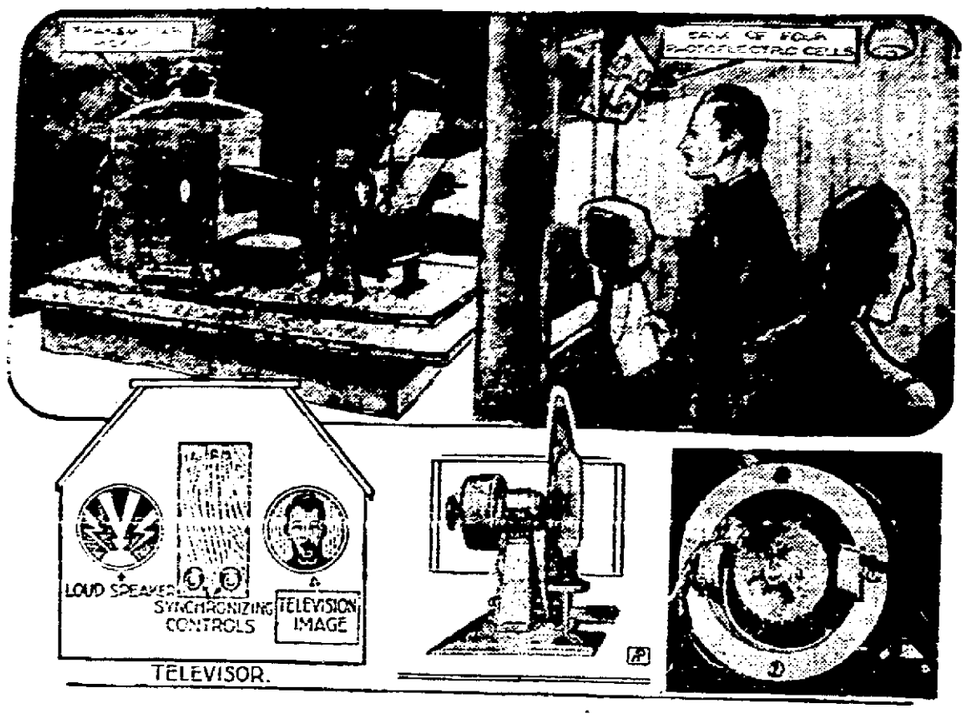
Baird May Soon Try Television Broadcast On American Station



Scene in the Baird television laboratories in New York, together with a sketch of receiver. In the lower center is the motor, the thin metal scanning disk and the neon lamp of the televisor, and at the lower right is a newly developed synchronizing mechanism.

By C. E. Butterfield
Radio Editor
(Associated Press Feature Service)

New York, (AP).—Television slowly is breaking down the barriers that continue to keep it in the laboratory stage.

Such is the impression obtained at the Baird Television laboratories which have been established in New York as a step toward making possible home reception of pictures by radio. How soon the object will be an accomplished fact can be determined only by the future.

In the local development rooms, part of which resembles a studio, various types of television cameras and receivers have been set up and tests are being made by the use of wires connecting the two units. In all of the tests both voice and picture of the speaker are fed into the receiver over separate channels.

The work is in charge of an English staff sent from the John L. Baird laboratories in London, and is headed by Capt. William J. Jarrard.

Synchronization of transmitter and receiver, so that the scanning disk of the latter will maintain the same speed as the transmitter, has been one of the serious obstacles to reliable television. Various methods have been proposed, including the use of special motors.

Baird, who gave his first television demonstration before members of the Royal Institution in London early in 1926, tackled the problem by developing a device to control the speed of the motor with a signal taken out of the received picture.

It consists of a small iron wheel containing as many sprockets as there are holes in the scanning disk. At each side of the wheel is an electro magnet, which makes contact with the sprockets and which accelerates or slows down the motor. The speed correcting signal, which actually is a part of the picture, is fed directly to the magnets.

The Baird scanning disk consists of very thin metal having 30 holes running in a spiral around the outer edge. This disk turns in front of the neon lamp, which fluctuates in step with the received current, and builds what the eye accepts as a moving picture. The disk is no thicker than cardboard.

An all-electric television receiver powered from the AC lines, is part of the equipment. It also contains the automatic synchronizer.

Laboratories were established on this side of the Atlantic, Captain Jarrard indicated, to make possible the broadcasting of radio pictures for home reception in America. Ultimately it is hoped to use the broadcast channels, which at present are restricted to television between the hours of 1 and 6 a. m.

Television broadcasts are now being made in Germany by Baird, and negotiations have been completed with the British Broadcasting company for such transmissions in England.

Mean Millionaire

The late Benjamin N. Duke of tobacco fame, advocated a liberal estate rather than a penurious spirit in the handling of money.

Mr. Duke said one night in a Y. M. C. A. address in Durham:

"If you are mean and grasping in your youth, the habit will grow on you, and you'll get no enjoyment out of money in your old age, even if you're a millionaire.

"An old millionaire of this kind bought a cheap radio set. Somebody asked him afterwards how he liked it.

"'Oh,' he grumbled, 'it's pretty fair to listen to, but the talks aren't much good to read by.'"

"Place of the Dead"

The old English word "hell" meant substantially the same thing as the Hebrew word "sheol," the dark place, or place of the dead. It is possible that the English word "cell," meaning a dark, underground room, and our own word "cellar," meaning the place under the house, may come from the same root. Those who have gone down on a cold winter morning to start a dead fire may appreciate the application. There are three words in the Bible translated "hell." One is "sheol." A second is "hades." And a third is "gehenna," which has reference to a valley near Jerusalem and is symbolic of the place of abandoned hope.

Freak Wagers

To stories of freak betting might be added another story of queer sporting events from Kenya. Mr. Bonar Dugby in his "Tigers, Gold and White Doctors," tells of a couple of surveyors who discovered that a small pool up in the Kenya highlands marked off the Great divide, a stream running off in one direction to the South Atlantic, and another trickling away to form a river running into the Indian ocean. For amusement the surveyors used to drop a small newt into the center of the pool and lay bets whether it would start to swim down to one ocean or the other.

Cleaning Pewter

Pewter articles are in great favor in modern homes and the beauty of these may be marred by improper care. Pewter is a soft metal, and should never be cleaned with harsh powders. Fine pulverized rottenstone mixed with sufficient raw linseed oil to make a paste is an excellent cleaning agent for general use. When a more thorough cleaning is necessary, use only a fine friction powder, such as whiting, and apply it with the finest grade of steel wool. After cleaning pewter it should be washed with hot suds and polished with a soft clean cloth.

Presents Clock To Senate House

Laura Angeda Webb Newman has presented to the trustees of the Senate House Association a beautiful Bulle clock made by the celebrated Martinot of Paris in 1642, which formerly belonged to Judge Charles Willoughby Dayton, one of the justices of the Supreme Court of the state of New York. It bears the inscription that it was presented to the Trustees of the Senate House Association by his children in loving memory in December, 1924. Judge Clearwater, president of the Senate House Association, in acknowledging the receipt of the gift, wrote that the trustees of the association were glad indeed to have so valuable a memento of so distinguished a native of Ulster county, as Judge Dayton. The judge was born in Marlborough and was a classmate of Morgan A. Dayton, who studied law with Judge Clearwater in the office of Schoonmaker and Hardenburgh over sixty years ago.

Ulster County Dinner January 18

The banquet committee of the Ulster County Society have designated Saturday evening, January 18, 1930, as the date for their 12th annual dinner and get-together. The affair will be held at the Hotel Astor, Broadway at 44th street, New York city.

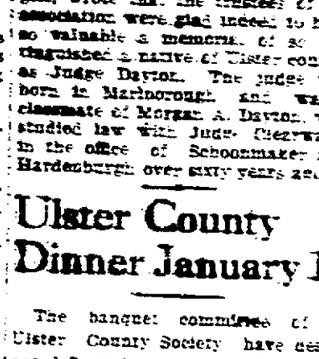
Delancey Mathews of Kingston will be the guest of honor. A list of the other speakers and entertainment will be announced later.

WHY HE FAILED

A young man undergoing an examination was asked to describe different electric batteries, among them one named the Daniel cell.

His reply was: "About Daniel's cell very little is known, but it is generally supposed to have been a bear den furnished with lions. As Daniel is dead and the lions are dead, what on earth is the good of raking up an old story?"

JUST TO GET THERE



"What do you walk so much for, Jim?"

"To get to the places I want to go to, Bob."

See the Point?

A porcupine lay sleeping.
Bob stopped to pluck a quill;
He got what he was after—
In fact, he got his fill.

Her Day Off

Mr. Dalmore—Mother won't be home to dinner this evening, honey; so you will have to take her place.

Little Ethel—Do you mean I won't have to be polite and respectful to you?

So She Made Him Eat Dirt

They were discussing the disappointed lover.

"I didn't suppose he'd have the nerve to propose to you?"

"Oh, he did all right; but he didn't have the cash."

A Timid Brother

Blinks—So you have no desire to go up in an airplane, eh?

Jinks—No. A good many years ago I fell off a horse and discovered even from that distance the ground was anything but a soft place to hit.

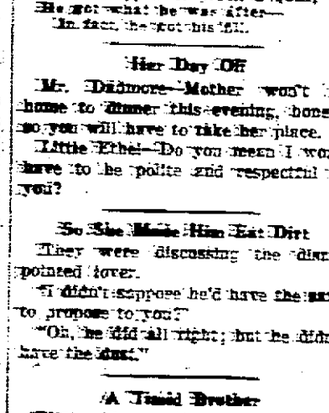
Class

"You made a bad break in alluding to that woman as an old hen."

"How so?"

"She must be somebody. I see she has been invited to lay a corner stone."

A DRESS FOR EVERY DAY



"She says she has a dress for every day in the week."

"Yes, I've seen it, dear."

Modal A Owner's Note

He rammed the cop with his car,
He owned a load of hay,
He tried to make a wrecking bee,
And then he passed away.

Cause of His Downfall

Lady—Here are five pennies for you; try your luck, but tell me, how did you come to get like this?

Beggar—Ah, my dear lady, you might well ask—once upon a time I was like you—gave away magnificent sums to the poor every day.

Three South Sea Stops

A Village in American Samoa.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THREE stops among the South Sea islands will give a thumbnail view of the forces that have played and are playing about those bits of land that have always held a fascination to travelers from the lands of Western civilization. The first port of call may well be Tai-O-Hai, which has been described as a "port of tragedy."

Situated at the innermost point of a horseshoe bay which furnishes a reasonably well protected harbor, Tai-O-Hai once gave promise of being a Pacific metropolis, a rival, perhaps in prospect, to Tahiti, 750 miles to the southwest. This town, on Nukahiva, largest of the Marquesas islands, is listed as the administrative seat of the French government of the Marquesas; but the honor is a hollow one, for the Marquesans are rapidly dying off. The hundred thousand or more who peopled the eleven islands a century ago have dwindled to 2,000 or 4,000.

When France took the islands over in 1824 the future seemed rosy to the white settlers who went there. The islands teemed with superlatively healthy, brawny natives. The rainfall was abundant and vegetation grew rankly. Dreams of exceedingly profitable coconut, cotton and vanilla plantations filled the heads of French adventurers. Tai-O-Hai was built with these dreams in mind, and stores, inns, churches, schools, and another accompaniment of civilization—a jail—sprang up.

But things did not work out as had been expected. The Marquesans did not care to become plantation laborers. They had led lives of ease, spending their time in idleness in gathering nature's fruits and in war among themselves. Some unscrupulous planters tried rum and opium as inducements to labor. They brought a certain temporary success, but they helped to bring a speedy end to all hope for the survival of the Marquesan people. To drunkenness and suddenness were soon added the white man's diseases—diseases which meant little to civilizations of America and Europe that had become largely immune to them, but which carried off the islanders like flies.

Tai-O-Hai, which had waxed, as quickly waned. To-day less than 150 people live in the village and there is only a handful of whites. The once populous valleys back in Nukahiva have been abandoned to the rank growth.

Papeete a Lively Town.

Next one may sail to Papeete, the chief port of Tahiti, metropolis of the southwestern Pacific, "the Honolulu of the South."

Because of its position almost midway between Panama and New Zealand, and its reasonable distance—as South sea distances go—from Samoa, the Marquesas and Hawaii, Papeete is a sort of ocean crossroads, and its cosmopolitan aspect never fails to impress visitors. On its wharves and in its streets one encounters vanilla and coconut planters; traders—French, British and American, engaged in every "line" conceivable from copra and silk stockings to fertilizer and pearls; sea captains and shipping agents; French officials (for Papeete is the capital of the French Pacific); missionaries; natives; the ever-present Chinaman; and the nondescript beach-comber.

Papeete may be "far from civilization" from the viewpoint of the stay-at-home, but the palate of the visitor to Papeete certainly will not suffer for delectable food. In the bustling port town with its 2,000 French residents, some of them competent chefs, one may find viands that would not be amiss in the restaurants of the Rue de la Paix—from vin rouge, through pousse roti to cafe noir. And if he wishes native food he may fare well on coconut-fed pig roasted whole, fish with coconut sauce, shrimp, baked bananas, and baked breadfruit, the latter with a texture like very fine cheese and an indescribable, mildly pleasant flavor. For dessert he will have oranges, pineapples and various tropical fruits.

The most ambitious sight-seeing trip in Tahiti is a circuit of the islands by horse-drawn vehicle, along the coastal strip. This entails the fording of many streams which flow out of the mountains of the interior. Or one may push up one of the many valleys over trails that skirt swift streams and plunge through tunnels of verdure to a mountain top. If one climbs for the view, however, the time must be well chosen, for clouds shroud the mountain summits a large part of the time. The most novel sight-seeing trip is made in a small boat to the coral reefs where, through water crystal clear, one may look down upon a beautiful undersea garden of weird and beautiful growths among which dart brilliantly colored fishes.

Pago Pago's Wonderful Harbor

For the third stopping place, one should visit Pago Pago, capital of American Samoa, which is the only bit of American soil that lies south of the Equator.

Pago Pago practically fell into the lap of a none too willing America while various powers were seeking island territory in the Pacific. But if the entire South seas had been combed with all the other nations standing deferentially by, a better location for a naval base hardly could have been chosen. Most South sea harbors are little more than crescent bays, protected by coral reefs, their safety largely dependent on the direction of the wind. At Pago Pago ships sail into the heart of a huge extinct volcanic crater, only a narrow entrance open to the sea. Furthermore, there is a sharp turn inside, the whole harbor being shaped much like the ankle and foot of a stocking.

The United States naval station is situated on the "instep," its back toward the sea, but with high mountains intervening. Pago Pago town lies at the "toe." Most of the anchorage is entirely out of sight of the sea, and the ships lie in deep placid water even when destructive gales are blowing outside.

Giving Pago Pago the premier place among Southseas havens does not do it justice. Many famous harbors are more commodious; but it is hardly too much to say that Pago Pago is at once one of the safest and most beautiful harbors in the world. A narrow strip of level land rims the harbor. Immediately beyond this strip the sides rise up steeply to mountainous heights, the sloping walls covered with varying shades of green, tropical vegetation. In addition to the naval station and Pago Pago town, three or four villages nestle close to the water's edge around the harbor, their thatched huts half hidden by coconut palms.

The harbor of Pago Pago almost cuts the Island of Tutuila in two. This is the largest isle of American Samoa, 17 miles long and about 5 miles wide. The other American islands lie about 60 miles to the east. Only one, Tau, about 5 miles in diameter, is of importance, though two smaller isles are inhabited. Altogether the population of American Samoa is about 8,000 some 6,000 residing on Tutuila.

American Samoa has been little spoiled by the civilization of the mother country, or that of other whites. Few whites reside in the islands besides the small group of missionaries and the officers, men and nurses at the naval station. Only one plantation is owned by a white man and only three or four whites have leaseholds. Practically the entire surface of the islands is owned in small tracts by individual natives. The United States even bought from individual landlords the 40 acres needed for its naval establishment.

Unnecessary

A school inspector was shocked at the muddy condition of the boys. He gave a little lecture to some of the older ones.

"Don't you think," he said, "it would be a good thing if you brushed your hair sometimes? Every morning," he added, "I brush mine, and I have no doubt your headmaster does the same."

One or two of the boys began to snigger. The inspector looked over his shoulder for the moral support of the headmaster, and found, to his horror that he was as bald as a billiard ball.

Singing for Exercise

Besides being a pleasure to the singer and sometimes to those around, the act of singing is a better exercise than most persons have any thought of. It is good exercise for the throat, lungs and chest and now it is recommended for the eyes. A western physician who is call upon to do a great deal of flying over the country says that after a particularly hard experience of this kind his eyes always seem to be affected, probably by the noise of the car and vibration of the engine. In this event he raises up his voice and sings to the best of his ability, and this treatment soon relieves the eyes.

Beautiful Things Seen Amid Coral Formations

Stone corals grow like plants. Some look like plants without leaves. Some have the stems and branches of trees and shrub life in an earthly garden, some resemble different forms of vegetation such as cacti, lichens, and mosses. Some corals adopt fantastic forms such as fans, pipe organs, ewers, and curious shapes. All are beautiful.

If the observer remains quiet, the under-water inhabitants appear from crevices in the coral, from under the anemones and seaweeds. Curiously marked and brightly colored fish will flash here and there, brilliant starfish will move slowly over the snowy sand or cling to rock surfaces. Some are bright blue, some variegated, some orange-hued and thickly set with tubercles.

Though among the lowliest forms of life, the starfish is one of the prettiest of sea dwellers. But it is a thug among sea things and makes its living by smothering or strangling its victims.

Frequently starfish are found wrapped about shellfish, which they appear to suck out of their shells after having smothered the occupant or paralyzed it with some acrid secretion. Occasionally the oyster retaliates by closing on one of the starfish's rays, but the attacker disengages the limb and goes away to grow another.

Earthworms Too Bulky For Ordinary Angler

If any one wishes to angle for whales, he should go to Australia for his bait, says the New York Times. Earthworms averaging from four to six feet long are reported from that continent. One specimen was discovered which measured nine feet. The account can hardly be set down as the yarn of a "nature faker," for it appears in the British scientific magazine Nature, which is careful about what it publishes.

These earthworms would have delighted Darwin, who wrote a book on worms, drawing attention to the extraordinarily clever way in which they drag leaves down their holes, by the tip instead of by the stalk, so that the leaf rolls up naturally.

The Australian worms have greenish, translucent eggs, with horny shells. They are said to make loud gurgling noises when they retire into their burrows on the approach of an enemy. But what animal would deliberately elect to antagonize such a creature? And why should nine-foot worms run away from anything? Perhaps they are too proud to turn.

Locust Swarms Still Bid Defiance to Man

There have been locust plagues ever since the days of the pharaohs. They are still plaguing the earth. Only a short time ago the Kenyal (South African) colony fruit show had to be abandoned, as the locusts had eaten nearly the whole of the fruit crop. Cases of swarms descending on a field of crops and in a few seconds leaving it completely barren of vegetable life, are not at all uncommon; but they do even more amazing things than that. There is the case of a Rhodesia-Aden and Pacific railway train traveling along the open country at 60 miles an hour, which was stopped dead by a plague of locusts. The driver and fireman saw them and exercised themselves to get every ounce of speed out of the engine with the idea of getting through the swarm before the impetus gave out. In a moment the train dashed straight into the swarming mass and was plowing straight through it, crushing countless numbers of insects with every revolution of the wheels. The wheels became slimed as if they had been greased, and then lost their grip of the rails. They simply spun round without moving the train. Before the train could be got moving again the fireman had to take his shovel to the front of the engine, shovel up huge masses of the insects and fling them clear of the track. By that method it became possible to move the train a few yards at a time until it was finally clear of the dense mass and could carry on with the journey.

Livingstone's Memorial

The spot where Livingstone died in northern Rhodesia is marked by a monument known to the natives as "Chipundu." Under a big mapundu tree Livingstone died, and his heart was buried. Later the decaying tree was cut down and a cement monument with a bronze plate placed there. In this district is a hospital and dispensary, at the head of which is Dr. H. F. Wilson, grandson of the famous missionary and explorer.

And They Thought It Fast

All records were broken in 1861 when the President's message to congress reached Philadelphia in nine hours and a half, and Boston in sixty-four hours. It was sent by special express.

Market for Fruits And Vegetables

New York, Dec. 18 (AP).—(State Department of Agriculture and Markets) Florida strawberry prices declined on the local wholesale district again today. The demand was exceedingly light. Sales on quart baskets were reported from 35 to 40 cents. During the previous week Florida started 20 carloads to northern markets. Last year at this time the carlot movement had not begun.

The trend on green peas was downward. Receipts were moderate but trading was light. Crates of forty and forty-five pounds from California jobbed out at $5 @ $7.25. Offerings from Mexico realized $6.25 @ $6.50.

Offerings of western cauliflower were moderate and price changes unimportant. The demand, however, was confined to large, attractive stock. Fanciest cauliflower from California peddled out as high as $2.75. The poorest worked out at $1.50.

The tone was weaker on Texas bunched beets and California carrots. Supplies were moderate. Trading was generally light. Crates of about five dozen bunches of Texas beets sold at $2.50 @ $3 and California carrots at $2.75 @ $3, occasionally $3.25.

String beans were plentiful from Florida. Shipments consisted mainly of the bountiful variety and ranged widely as to quality. Consequently sales varied greatly. Bushel hampers wholesaled as high as $2.75 and as low as 50 cents.

Florida last week sent 356 carloads of string beans to northern consuming centers. The movement was seven times greater than for the corresponding week a year ago.

Little activity prevailed for spinach. Prices were again lower and trading was generally slow. Jobbing on bushel baskets from Texas was transacted at $1.12½ to $1.37½. Virginia offerings ranged from 25 to 75 cents.

New York city's spinach receipts last week filled 172 cars.

The market closed weaker on big Boston lettuce but held steady on Romaine. Supplies were moderate but the demand was less active. Sales on Florida lettuce were at $1.50 @ $3.25 per half bushel hamper. Romaine brought $1.50 $2.25.

Financial and Commercial

New York, Dec. 18 (AP).—Prices on the New York Stock Exchange continued an erratic course today. Trading continued light. An early period of heaviness was followed by a brisk rally in midday, but fresh selling developed on the recovery. Trading was largely professional, although the weakness of several stocks was attributed to liquidation for the purpose of establishing income tax losses.

The announcement of the formation of a large middle western steel merger, which has been under way for a long time, was one of the most important and interesting developments in the day's news. Some disappointment was apparent at the further falling off in freight car traffic, and the appointment of a receiver for the American Piano Company.

United States Steel common, after moving up 1⅝ to 173, fell back to 169¼ and then rallied above 172. Auburn Auto dropped 6 points, Otis Elevator 5 and American Tobacco, Purity Baking, Loews and Fox Film sagged 3 to nearly 5 points in the early selling.

Concurrent strength of J. I. Case and the advance Rumely issues led to rumors of a possible combination of these companies. New York tractions also rallied briskly for some unexplained reason. General Electric converted an early loss of 3 points into a gain of 2 points, Detroit Edison and International Business Machines were marked up 5 points above last night's close. American and foreign power 4⅝, and Freeport Texas and Howe Sound about 2½ points each.

Quotations given by Parker McElroy & Co., members N. Y. Stock Exchange, 120 Broadway, New York city, branch office, Stuyvesant Hotel.

BLIGHT CONTROL WORK IN WINTER

Disease Causes Big Losses to Apple and Peach Grower.

Winter pruning and burning of the hold-over cankers on apple and pear trees offers the only sure method of controlling fire blight. Each year in the growing season many persons write to the Missouri College of Agriculture asking what can be done to stop the ravages of this destructive orchard disease, only to be told that the chief control measures should have been applied during the preceding winter. It is therefore highly important that all orchardists should be fully informed on these matters during the winter months while there still is opportunity to fight the disease effectively.

Fire blight is one of the greatest hazards of the apple and pear industry, says T. J. Talbert, head of the department of horticulture at the college. The losses occasioned by it are enormous. It is doubtful if any other disease of apples and pears causes a greater annual loss. Young orchards consisting of susceptible varieties may be wiped out in one season, and the crop in bearing orchards may be reduced from 25 to 50 per cent or more.

The most effective remedy so far discovered for fire blight consists of pruning, cutting out, and burning the so-called "hold-over" cankers during the winter, supplemented by the control of injurious insects which spread fire blight. To these control measures should be added the regulation of growth of the trees, and if the grower gives some attention to the matter of growing the more resistant varieties he will generally succeed better against fire blight.

The Missouri College of Agriculture has a circular giving complete directions for the control of fire blight. It is Station Circular 127—free for the asking.

Pruning to Make Fruit Trees Much Stronger

The loss entailed each year by the breaking down of fruit trees is in a large measure avoidable if proper care is taken in the early years of the tree. A great deal of the damage is a result of poor crotches or a poorly-shaped head, judged by the standards of strength. Unfortunately, when judged by the standards of sanitation, the open center tree is perhaps a trifle better than the modified leader type, which is the type we are going to talk about.

The modified leader system consists in allowing the central leader to grow to a height of four or five feet, or even more if a high-headed tree is desired. Along this central leader branches are selected to form the main framework of the tree. Probably not more than six will be kept and these will be well spaced around the leader to get a well-balanced head. As soon as the uppermost branch has been selected, the leader is cut off at this point. This gives a tree with a central axis for about five feet, with branches radiating from it, which is a much stronger tree than the old open center or vase-shaped tree which is frequently seen.

Injurious Insects Are Controlled by Poisons

The San Jose scale, the twig borer of peach, prune and related fruits, the cherry slug, spider mites and aphids are insects of general importance that attack some fruits. The first two pests are successfully controlled by the usual dormant application of lime-sulphur spray. The cherry slug although capable of doing much injury, is readily controlled by arsenical poisons. Spider mites are effectively destroyed by spraying with commercial liquid lime-sulphur used in dilution of 1 to 30. Control of the aphids has been more perplexing, and for this reason investigations were made.

Winter Pruning

Bushy or small trees are best pruned during the winter months removing the leaf buds with the exception of two resting buds and the main branch is shortened for about half its length. The lead or terminal branch is removed in its entirely. The branches are pruned off with part of last year's wood. All twigs containing flowering buds must be left standing.—American Home.

Planting Grapevines

Grapevines must be planted on land with good drainage, and on land that is free of root rot. Before planting the vines plow the land a couple of times just as deeply as possible. Then dig holes two feet deep, and if possible put in a lot of old bones, cover with good soil, pack dirt, and set vine. Stake the vines the first year. Keep all growth pinched off except one cane. By doing this the vine will reach the trellis the first season, and will bear the second year.

Banana Fermentation

It is not fermentation that makes a banana turn brown after it is peeled. It is oxidation. If the bananas are to be used for salad, coating them at once with mayonnaise or olive oil will prevent it.

"Thoughts of Youth"

Longfellow wrote much that has worn indifferently well, but the lyric of his vanished youth is both poetry and truth. Its refrain Longfellow did not write but took it from old Lapland song. "A boy's will is the wind's will and the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts." This is the boy's secret, which makes a man of him before he has learned to behave like one. He seems to outgrow it, passing in turn the "towering confidence of twenty-one," the arrogance of young manhood and the insensibility of middle age.—Boston Herald.

Identified

The governor of the state was inspecting some of its institutions. When he reached one of the insane hospitals he received a message to call his office on an important matter. Not getting as quick service as he thought he should, he barked at the operator, "I guess you don't know who I am?"

"No," replied the operator, "but I know where you are."—Boston Globe.

Memories of "Blind Tom"

"Blind Tom's" vocal imitations were almost as astonishing as his instrumental ones. One of his feats was to stand with his back to the piano while he played the "Fisher's Hornpipe" with one hand and "Yankee Doodle" with the other, while he sang "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, the Boys Are Marching." He had an absolute pitch of unfailing accuracy.

Convicts Explain Recent Outbreaks

New York, Dec. 18 (AP).—A report issued today by the National Society of Penal Information contains an explanation by the convicts themselves of the underlying cause for recent prison outbreaks.

The explanation was given in a report by the executive committee of the Mutual Welfare League of Auburn prison, where two outbreaks in recent months have taken the lives of a dozen prisoners and keepers. The Mutual Welfare League is an organization of the prisoners, to which is entrusted many details of prison management and discipline.

The report lists five reasons for prison discontent:

1. Excessive sentences with the inducement of earning time off for good behavior cut to a negligible amount by recent laws.

2. Men actually innocent of the crime for which they have been found guilty who brood over their wrong and spread discontent.

3. Monotonous and insufficient diet, for which the warden is not responsible, since supplies are secured through a purchasing agent and contractors. They also charge that the money allotted for food is insufficient.

4. Applying to convicts sentenced under the old laws the more stringent provisions of recent legislation, the most drastic being the rule that earned good time compensation does not take effect until after the minimum sentence has been served.

5. Withholding from long term prisoners the compensation they earn in prison until their discharge.

Lieutenant Bundy reported a temperature of ten degrees below zero. The plane carried a full military load, including machine guns, and was aloft 45 minutes.

Courage Wins Happiness in Tough Battle

YOU would think a very old lady laid up with a broken thigh in a plaster cast would be a hard patient to keep happy. Yet, according to Nurse Helen V. Griffin, 64 Prospect Avenue, Hackensack, New Jersey, it can be done—if you know how.

"My patient," says Miss Griffin, "being unable to move about by herself became very constipated. Many medicines in pill form were used with little or no results. Finally when we came home from the hospital I began the use of Nujol.

"Soon my patient became regular and comfortable, without any pain or discomfort. Now she is happy and cheerful, since regularity has begun and continued with such little trouble."

If Nujol will make an old lady feel well, who cannot move around in bed, what will it do for you?

Nurse Griffin knew how harmless Nujol is, containing no drugs or medicine, but acting only as a natural lubricant. She knew how it keeps excess of body poisons from forming (we all have them) and helps carry them away.

Women need a natural aid like Nujol just as much, if not more than men. There are so many physical conditions they have to go through that upset their normal schedule.

Just remember that all your body needs to be regular as clock-work is a simple natural lubricant. Be sure, however, that you get the right one—the one tested and approved by millions of people.

See what Nujol will do for you. You can get it at any drug store for the price of a ticket to a good movie. You will find that Nujol works easily, normally. Try it today!

You'll wonder how you ever lived without this natural, pleasant, easy way to health and happiness!

Always Smiling!

Believe Central Will Take Over U. & D. January 1

It seems quite generally accepted in railroad circles here that the New York Central company will January 1, assume control of the Ulster & Delaware railroad, employes of the latter company as well seem appear to be the understanding at Kingston though no official statement has been made by the U. & D. company. The report is given credence because the bonds of the U. & D. company, which had previously sold around 65 and 67 and which while past due have not been refunded, are now selling around 92 or better.

With the Central in control of the U. & D. road and possibly of the Southern New York railway, railroad men are speculating upon the probability of the two roads being merged and if merged, will the U. & D. road be electrified so that they can be operated as one unit.

It is pointed out that the electrification of the U. & D. road would require no rebuilding and that the operation of an electrical road is much cheaper than of a steam road. Were the contrary proposal that the Southern New York be changed to a steam road be adopted, it would require the practical rebuilding of the road, bridges and relocation of the right of way in numerous places which would involve a large capital outlay.

It is urged by the men thinking the electrification of the U. & D. road the more feasible plan that the economies would be many and that it could be accomplished and all the traffic handled at a less expense than at present, while the change would permit the operation of both roads as a unit with some savings resulting.

In any event Oneonta is keenly interested in the probability that the Central will soon take over the road to Kingston and the effect it will have upon Oneonta commercially. Much speculation is being indulged in by railroad employes in the city, officials of the D. & H. and of the U. & D. both declining to express an opinion. It is certain that should the change be made effective January 1, the developments will be closely watched here.—The Oneonta Star.

Uncle Abner's Will

By ROSE MEREDITH

BETTY LASHER waved her hand to the motor boat car swung around the corner in a straight line and waved good-by as the car vanished. Betty was still smiling when she entered the cozy living room and blinked her pansy brown eyes at Uncle Abner. The elderly gentleman looked over his spectacles and frowned.

"Who was that young man, Betty?"

"George Farnum, Uncle Abner," purred Betty, pulling off her hat.

"H-mm!" Uncle Abner always cleared his throat when he was about to say something disagreeable. Betty sat down primly on the comfortable old sofa. "H-mm," repeated Mr. Cory. "Am I to understand that you have broken your engagement to Jack?"

Betty twisted the diamond on her left hand and blushed.

"Broken my engagement to Jack? No indeed, Uncle dear, but Jack is away off in Kansas now, and it is dull—George has been so good to take me around."

"George is a fine fellow."

"Isn't he?" cried Betty.

"Jack is a fine fellow, too," pursued Mr. Cory, dryly.

"We know that," murmured Betty, blushing furiously. She picked up her hat and turned toward the hall.

"Elizabeth!" called Uncle Abner coldly, "does Jack know that you have been receiving attentions from George?"

"I have told him about the rides," said Betty.

A few days later Betty sat on the front porch knitting a gay sweater. Inside the library Uncle Abner was talking to his lawyer, Daniel Smith. Their voices rose and fell in endless discussion of stocks. Betty's wandering thoughts were halted by the sound of Mr. Cory's thin voice speaking with the slow distinctness that always marked his dictation:

"All the rest and residue of my estate . . . I give and bequeath to my beloved niece, Elizabeth Lasher . . . provided she becomes the wife of George Humphrey Farnum . . ." rumble, rumble, Betty heard no more.

She had overheard that much because Uncle Abner had spoken louder, as if to impress his lawyer with the words. Pale and trembling, afraid of she knew not what, Betty crept away from the porch and ran out to the shady orchard, where she sat down on the grass to think things out, as she had done when she was a girl.

What a chaotic thing life was!

What about Jack Monroe!

"Well, what about him?" thought Betty, as she pictured herself proceeding up the aisle of St. Matthew's church on Uncle Abner's arm, if he were still alive, to meet George Humphrey Farnum—George, smiling and blond, the pink of perfection in husbands, rich, handsome, clever.

A wood thrush high in an old tree sang his evening hymn.

Tears came into the girl's eyes. The thrush—she liked to believe it was the same bird—had witnessed her betrothal to Jack—the tender song always made her homesick with longing for her lover. Now she listened with tears running down her cheeks. She would go to Jack now—tonight—they would be married at once and she would work so hard for him. Uncle Abner could leave all his money to George Farnum and welcome.

A very careful looking Betty walked into the house and ran plump into Uncle Abner.

He looked at her over the top of his spectacles. "Well, my dear," he said mildly. "George Farnum telephoned . . . he asked to have you ring him up . . . something about a farm dance."

"Oh-h-h!" muttered this strange Betty, who loved to dance and who could dance the soles from her pretty slippers any time."

"You will call him up?"

Betty flashed around on him. "Do you want me to go with him?"

"My dear child, please yourself," said the old man, smiling benignly.

"I will not go," interrupted Betty feverishly. "I must confess that I was sitting on the porch and overheard a few words you said to Mr. Smith—that about your will—and leaving me some money provided—pro-vi-d-e-d I married G-george Farnum."

"H-m-m!"

"Yes, I did, and then I went down to the orchard. I have made up my mind to go to Jack at once . . . tomorrow . . . and get married and we will live in a hut on c-c-canned beans and t-things. Money isn't everything, Uncle Abner, and I do appreciate all your love and kindness to an orphaned girl—but I love Jack."

"My dear! My dear!" Uncle Abner patted the bright head leaning against the newel post. "Why—why—you have made me the happiest man in the world—I was afraid you would marry George . . . and I wasn't sure which one you really loved and so I had Smith call, and I dictated that change in my will on purpose so that you could hear it . . . but it doesn't mean anything. You and Jack are my children and I hope you are coming here to live in my lonely house?" Betty was in his arms now, crying.

"And Jack is coming home tomorrow. Here is his telegram—and a September wedding would be just the thing, my dear!" rumbled the old man as they mounted the stairs together.

"Out in the orchard the thrush sang.

The SANDMAN STORY

WHERE THE YEARS GO

BACK in the Valley of Beautiful Memories, where the years go when they have finished their work in the big world, there is always a great deal of happy talk going on. Often the days go there to talk when they are waiting for their time to come forth before the world people.

And at this time Tuesday was up there. Tuesday was having a little holiday while Monday was on duty.

The years that had gone before were there, for you know when the Old Year died he always goes to the Valley of Beautiful Memories. There he is always so delighted that he does not feel sad when he welcomes his successor—the little young New Year.

The years tell of the beautiful things that have happened while they were about—and the sad things they leave behind in a great big old bundle to be thrown away, for only the lovely memories can be taken along with them. So it is in Fairyland.

The years had been talking quite a little when Tuesday came along. He was dressed in a rather wild and windy fashion, for he was working now in a rather wild and windy month.

He sat down in a beautiful green moss chair while the years gathered about him.

"What is the news of the big world?" they asked. "Is the New Year doing well? Not such a New Year by now," they added.

"How the little years do grow up," said one old year, just as though he would have liked to add now, "I remember that little year when it was only so high."

But they all listened to what Tuesday was saying.

"Tomorrow," said Tuesday, "when I shall be on duty, is the birthday of little Dolly.

"And I wanted to come here to talk about her with all of you. It seemed only right that I should come here. You know we days have noticed at different times how very lovely and how much loved Dolly is, and we've all, at different times, had the joy of celebrating her birthday.

"Years," Tuesday continued, "I want to talk to you because here, in this Valley of Beautiful Memories, you know so much about the happiness and the beauty and the richness and the joy to be had from happy memories.

"You can throw away ugly memories in your old bundle as you come into this lovely valley, but in the world they can't do that so well. Memories have a way of sticking whether they are good or bad, pleasant or unpleasant.

"And that is why it is so important, so tremendously important that people see that what they do and the way they act and the way their hearts feel will only cause love and happiness in the world.

"That is the way with Dolly. About her are only wonderful memories. She has never caused unhappiness, she has always made happiness and love. There is something in the way she moves, the way she smiles, the way she laughs, the way she talks, that make those around her so happy that their happiness goes deep into their hearts and stays there. Beautiful, beautiful memories are always to be had when those who know Dolly think of her.

"So I have come here, as you see. But not only does Dolly give people happiness when they think about her. All, all the time she is giving happiness. How? you may ask. Just by being herself. That is the way she is. It is her secret. I only know it is so.

"Yes, I shall go forth on her birthday tomorrow and I shall see her from the moment she opens her eyes until she goes to bed again at night. I shall be there when the earliest bird will sing her a birthday greeting. I shall be there as she eats her breakfast on the pink dishes she always uses. I shall be there right through the whole day until, at night, she gets into her tub and washes with a bright pink washcloth and later dries herself with a bright pink bath towel.

"I shall be there all of tomorrow. And I shall see from the expression in the eyes of those who love her what is in their hearts and how they mean the jolly, jolly wishes of 'many happy returns.'"

And as Tuesday left all sang a birthday greeting:

Dolly, beloved, so fair and so gay,
We wish you so many happy returns of the day!

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

BREAKING A MIRROR

THE primitive man looking at his own reflection in a still pool beheld a phenomenon he could not explain. He saw something which was not himself but which must be so closely related to himself that there was no joke in it. That's the way a savage feels today when he looks into a mirror for the first time. We are all descended from primitive man and savages and their ideas, Professor Freaud would say, "persist in our unconscious ego." Even in the Middle Ages a mirror was regarded as not altogether "canny" by the lower classes. What is known as sympathetic magic has always regarded a close connection as existing between a person and his "counterfeit presentment." We know better now but our "subconscious"—or our "unconscious" as some of the psychologists say—self has not fully shaken off the effect of long ages of superstition; and who is there who can see a mirror accidentally broken without a secret uneasiness? He may boast that he can do so—but can he? The smashing of the mirror destroys the reflected image—his counterfeit self or a surface which has born it, as it has also borne the image of the other members of his family. Therefore he—himself—or some member of his family, whispers the lingering voice of despised, forgotten but inherited belief in sympathetic magic, is in danger. All of which accounts for the very prevalent superstition that if you break a looking glass there will be a death in the family within the year. If no death occurs the breaking of the glass is forgotten. But suppose one does occur? Ah, then it is remembered and mirrors are handled very carefully in that household thereafter.

Puts Swindlers at Million

More than a million persons in the United States are living entirely on the proceeds of confidence games and other dishonest schemes of obtaining money, the vice president of a New York surety company is quoted. These leeches actually take more than three and one-half billion dollars from unsuspecting wage earners, he says.

Dear Editor:

I'VE learned not to jay-walk when in Indianapolis. The cops let you get way across and then make you go clear back where you started from. It's embarrassing.

A big central sign stated that 63 people had been killed in a year by local street accidents. During our half day there they chalked it up to 64. That was moving too fast for me, and I hustled along to a safer place.

Vare Wants a Complete Rest

Philadelphia, Dec. 16 (AP)—William S. Vare, for many years leader of the Philadelphia Republican organization, is tired of politics and wants a complete rest, according to his physician, Dr. Elwood R. Kirby.

Dr. Kirby said that because of Vare's health he would advise him not to become a candidate for the republican nomination for United States Senator in the May primaries and that unless an unforeseen political situation developed he felt certain Mr. Vare would withdraw from the contest.

After his rejection by the Senate on the grounds of excessive campaign expenditures during the 1924 primary and the appointment to the vacancy of Joseph R. Grundy, Mr. Vare announced that he was "in the field to the finish" and that he would be a candidate against Grundy "or anyone else".

"I have said nothing definite to him on the subject yet," Dr. Kirby said after an examination of the stricken leader in his Atlantic City cottage yesterday. "I may not force the decision of him for some time. It all depends on his condition and his mental attitude as to when I shall do so."

Members of Mr. Vare's family were reported to be in full accord with Dr. Kirby's opinion that he should retire from politics.

Mr. Vare has been able to spend but little time in Philadelphia since he was stricken with paralysis of the left side in August, 1924. A few days after he was carried to the hotel he collapsed from fatigue and exhaustion and is still confined to his room at the seashore.

"Language of Flowers" Spoken in South Seas

Romantic stories of the South seas were related recently by Sir Rupert Gilchrist, British artist who has returned from there.

"The girls" he said, "like white blood, also but flowers and the" added, "and even gather them for friends and then take them to the sea with a little basket or later examine the charts on the beach.

"If a girl wants a lover she wears a little white flower over the right ear. If she has a lover she wears the flower over the left ear.

"When she wears the white flower over both ears it means that she has a lover but want another.

"When a young man likes a girl he follows the air of the heart and throws a white flower at her feet. Love on these islands is a language of flowers."

All the natives were Sir Rupert believe in ghosts and have mysterious haunt the place.

"One of the unusual spirit visitations" Mr. Gilchrist said, "is known as the 'blood sausage' which is a fairly frequent occurrence.

"On one occasion when some natives were assembled in a hut a terrific noise was heard outside. The chief told them all to get out as quickly as possible. When they returned to the hut everything in the room was in confusion and the walls were splashed with long worms that looked like lizard. All kinds of natives that they were called upon. Cause of the mystery was never known.

Great French Soldier Remembered Early Days

During the late Marshal Foch's visit to St. Louis one of his American aides-de-camp mentioned during the meeting of the "Old Army League" and the name Charles Swenzer stamped the famous commander in charge. It was a pleasure to discover Foch, and the latter manned to call the colonel's aide.

That night, guests at the Charles Swenzer, native of a pioneer town, and an ardent admirer with Foch. The marble words he had written on the mantelpiece were the plain words and he enjoyed the longest interview granted by Foch during his entire visit.

"You see" explained Foch later "we were comrades in the First Colonial regiment at Algiers in 1877. At that time I was a lieutenant and Swenzer was a sergeant."

Carnegie's Plan to Retire

Andrew Carnegie, when he was thirty-three years old, drew up a plan for the remainder of his life. It was found among his private papers after his death. He figured then that in two more years he would have an annual income of $50,000. About $1,000 a week. Enough for a Scotchman to retire on. So he proposed to turn his back forever on the smoke and grime of steel mills. But by the time two years and passed dollars were falling about him as thick as raindrops in a July cloudburst. He was on the road to making millions. Scores of them. The lure was too dazzling: the game too fascinating. He kept on.—Dale Carnegie in System.

Discretion and Valor

When Demosthenes, who fought as one of the heavy infantry in the battle of Chaeronea, 338 B. C., was censured because he abandoned his shield and ran away from the enemy he retorted with a line from Menander, the Greek comedian:

"The man who runs away may fight again."

Despite his flight, the Athenians kept their faith in Demosthenes, and he delivered the funeral oration over his 3,000 countrymen who, braver or less fortunate than himself, perished or were taken prisoner on the field that he deserted.—Detroit News.

Cuba's Charm for Tourist

The eastern end of Cuba has a fascination distinctly its own. Perhaps there is nowhere in the wide world a more interesting hotel than that at Camaguey. To live for a time in this quaint inn is worth the long journey across Cuba, says a traveler.

Santiago has a peculiar charm, too, entirely outside its historical interest. Those who search for lovely spots will feel kinship with Santiago.

It was at the entrance to the harbor of Santiago that Lieut. Richard Pearson Hobson, later known as the "Immortal," sunk the Merrimac in an effort to bottle up the Spanish fleet.

Lobster not a Fish

Though it is customary to speak of the lobster "fishery," the interesting animal is not a fish, but a crustacean, says Nature Magazine. It belongs to a division of the animal kingdom that includes such diverse creatures as shrimps, crabs, wood lice, water fleas and barnacles.

Tickets For Bouts Here Friday In Big Demand

Those who expect to get a close-up of the armory fights Friday night are advised to place their orders for tickets as soon as possible because the demand for ringside seats has already reached a number larger than any for the corresponding time before fights so far this season.

Seat sales and talk among the fight fans presages that the armory will be packed Friday night. The card, led by the Nick Zinna vs. Harry Mulcahey eight rounder, is attracting much attention. Plenty of action is promised by the supporting matches scheduled, which are as follows.

Johnny Blaine, Kingston, vs. Charlie Molvin, Kingston, eight round semi-final; Pete "Kid" Buckman, this city, vs. Eddie McKenna, 14th Infantry, six rounder; Roy Van Buren, Kingston, vs. Eddie Ziegler, New York, six rounds; Jerry Sampere, Poughkeepsie, vs. Charlie Wimms, West Point, four rounds.

Sport Slants

By Alan J. Gould

(Associated Press Sports Editor.)

The All-American debate is about wrapped up for 1929, but it is interesting to note greater agreement this year than usual on a number of the outstanding stars.

Four of the all-stars, Joe Donchess of Pittsburgh, Jack Cannon of Notre Dame, Ben Ticknor of Harvard and Frank Carideo of Notre Dame, were unanimous selections, so far as any mythical team observed to date is concerned.

Red Sleight of Purdue and Bronko Nagurski of Minnesota were so close to being unanimous that there was scarcely any difference, thus establishing extraordinary agreement on six of the 11 men nominated for honors.

The widest range of opinion was reflected in the choice of halfbacks, although The Associated Press country-wide consensus showed Toby Uansa well ahead of all candidates and Red Cagle, the Army captain, mustering sufficient votes to beat out Pest Welch of Purdue by a close margin. Lom of California, Glassgow of Iowa, Banker of Tulane and McEver of Tennessee ran strong in a number of precincts.

Fesler and Tappaan flashed a close race for the distinction of sharing the flanks with Donchess. Montgomery and Schwarz furnished a good contest for the honor of being opposite Cannon at guard. Ticknor ran far ahead of any center. Among the fullbacks, Pug Parkinson of Pitt and Tony Holm of Alabama were the favorites, although Welch, Marsters, Nagurski and Pomeroy were the pick of scattered experts.

Perhaps one of the strangest developments of the All-America argument was the tendency to table Booth of Yale for further consideration. Albie's failure to shine at the close and the fact that as a sophomore he has two more chances to make the all-star aggregation contributed to this, yet support in the balloting was conspicuously lacking for the youth, who was more talked about than any other ball-carrier of the season.

There can be no question about Booth's class—not to anyone who saw the Blue midget outplay the great Red Cagle and the equally great Al Marsters on successive Saturdays. When it's figured that 150,000 saw Albie on these two days, he ought to be able to muster a few votes. He got the cheers, anyway. Next year he may get the ballots.

Quite a few of the gridiron heroes may be noticed tossing basketballs around during the next few months, even though there is not quite the glamour to tossing a two-pointer through the hoop as there is in ploughing over for a touchdown.

Booth is among the "cage" stars at Yale. He captained the freshman basketball team. Stevens of Cornell, Tys of Columbia, Baker of Pittsburgh and Wittmer of Princeton are others making a quick hop from the gridiron to the court.

Harmeson of Purdue, Schoonover of Arkansas, Rothert of Stanford, Clark of Colorado College, Churchill of Oklahoma, Fesler of Ohio State, Truskowski of Michigan, Tanner of Minnesota and Bergherm of Northwestern also rank high in the two sports which have the arts of passing and blocking in common.

Petrone vs. Kid Chocolate.

New York, Dec. 18 (AP).—After battling second-raters in tune-up bouts for the past month or so, Kid Chocolate, dusky Cuban featherweight, returns to major competition tonight in a ten-round bout with Dominick Petrone of Harlem at the New York Coliseum. Chocolate, who never has been beaten, probably will be a decided favorite over Petrone but the Harlem battler is considered nobody's set-up.

Shires May Quit The Ring

Chicago, Dec. 18 (AP).—The great Arthur Shires is almost convinced that as a professional fighter he is a good first baseman. He may retire from the ring.

Since he dropped the decision to George Trafton after five rounds Monday night, Shires has been doing a lot of sleeping and no little thinking and he is considering forgetting about fighting and getting in shape for baseball.

"Maybe professional fighting isn't my game after all," the great one orated to friends who came to offer condolences and quick remedies for the marks Trafton put on his face. "I have got about all I can out of it now—a few thousand dollars and a fat two weeks' vaudeville contract. Unless someone gets me darn mad with his challenges, I may quit."

It is understood King Arthur's vaudeville calls for a salary of $2,000 a week.

Meanwhile, Promoter Jim Mullen was being besieged with requests for a chance to meet the "bad boy" of the White Sox in the ring. Baseball players, football players and a few boxers who haven't had a fight for a decade or more wanted to fight him. Al Nesser, veteran guard of the Akron, Ohio, professional football team, wants to fight Trafton for the "professional football championship of the world."

Highland Has 2 Games Booked

Highland Hose Company basketball team has two games booked for this week. Thursday night the firemen will travel to Liberty, where they will mix it with the Emeralds and Friday night will try to stay Wappingers Falls at Smith's Hall, Highland.

The southern Ulster boys know that they will have a tough time with the Emeralds because the Liberty team came near to overthrowing them at Smith's Hall last Friday. The final score was 34-32 in favor of Highland, who took the game in the last minute of play. Mickey Husta of this city, playing forward for the firemen, was credited with tossing in the winning field point. He caged it in the last minute of play.

Wappingers Falls is expected to give the Highlanders plenty of trouble, too. The team has a good record and will put forth every effort to uphold it Friday night.

HACK WILSON TRAINING HIS EXPLOSIVE TEMPER

Chicago, Dec. 18 (AP).—Hack Wilson, the burly Cub outfielder, is in training at his winter home in Martinsburg, W. Va., but not for a ring battle with Arthur "The Great" Shires.

He is training his explosive temper so he can laugh off the shouts of "Sunny Boy" that are almost certain to greet him every time he steps on a diamond next season.

"It's going to be tough listening to them call me 'Sunny Boy' because I lost that fly ball in the sun during that world series game in Philadelphia," Hack said, "but it's all a part of the racket. I'm training myself to control my temper and laugh it off."

"But they hadn't better get insulting," Hack added.

Bell Is Best

None other than Rogers Hornsby is out with a big boost for Lester Bell, the third baseman whom the Cubs recently purchased from the Boston Braves. Hornsby was quick to say that Bell (shown above) is one of the best men in the game to play the hot corner.

Little Bobby had been carefully instructed how to behave during grace. One evening when there was company for dinner Bobby's father had no sooner finished saying grace than the small boy exclaimed somewhat excitedly: "Papa, Papa, Aunt Ann didn't duck."

Baseball Lost Prospect When the Whistle Blew

An untimely blast from a train whistle spoiled a promising baseball career for James R. Record, managing editor of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

He was playing in the outfield for a professional team at Rock Island, Ill., and his team led by one run when the opponents came to bat the last of the ninth.

"They loaded the bases," Record's brother relates, "but Jim's team retired a couple of men without permitting the score to be tied. The next batter hit a pop fly to Jim. He should have caught it easily.

"It happened that the engineer of an approaching freight train pulled his whistle just as Jim prepared to catch the ball. He was so startled he didn't even touch it.

"That night, after being released, Jim decided newspaper work was his forte."

Baseball Manager Must Pay for Punch to Jaw

Loss of a 17-inning game by the Oakland team of the Coast Baseball league last summer was bad enough, in the opinion of Ivan Howard, Oaks manager, but it was made more bitter by a Superior court verdict that he must pay $5,000 as a result of ill temper during the game.

W. D. McElwain, Oakland oil salesman and baseball fan, sued Howard for $25,000, charging the latter struck him on the jaw after the game. Howard claimed McElwain had been "razzing" him from the stands. McElwain said it was the man next to him. The jury was out one hour.

Ty Cobb Once Tripped Up by Ordinary Waiter

Lots of professional baseball players pride themselves on their gift of repartee, but out on the road even the smartest of them are beaten at that sort of game.

Ty Cobb, king of baseball players and one of the cleverest talkers in the business, once was tripped up by an ordinary waiter.

In a small hotel in Indiana one day Ty loudly called the attention of a waiter to a fly in his soup.

"Very true, my dear Mr. Cobb," said the waiter, "but why should you worry when there is not a chance in the world of you catching it."

Y. M. C. A. Drubs Saugerties Five On Local Court

The local Y. M. C. A. team after taking a trimming from the Saugerties squad in their first game of the season, defeated the village aggregation by a score of 65 to 22 at the Y court Tuesday night. The "Y" team did nothing but toss the ball through the hoop. Saugerties did little of this and when they did start, it wasn't until the second quarter.

Saugerties had a strong team and proved it in their first game with the local Y team. Nevertheless, there was something lacking in the visitors' playing Tuesday. Their defense had little or no effect while their offensive work was extremely poor.

On the other hand "Chet" Dolson's men played far superior to their opponents. The "Y" team worked the ball down the court in no time and just as quickly they tossed in scores. It looked like a contest between the members of the Y team to see who could score the most points.

14-0 At Quarter.

The first quarter saw Saugerties fail in many attempts to score. Not one found the hoop for a tally and they took shots from all angles of the court. The "Y" team was somewhat doing the same thing but they were meeting with success. The score indicated this fact for when the opening session ended the tally was 14 to 0 in the Y team's favor.

The second quarter revealed a few points for the visitors. Their passwork improved a little due to the encouraging two points made by Brice. He started the ball a rolling so his teammates followed suit gathering points for a short time and things looked as though they might become interesting. Then the Y team began their wild scoring again and they went on to 30 points and Saugerties had ten when the second quarter ended.

The third session saw little scoring done by either team. The Y team collected but 10 points and Saugerties five. This stanza gave out to the fans more basketball than the other two. More time was spent in passing the ball, but neither team could do much in the line of collecting points. The tally at the end of this quarter was 45 to 15 in the Y team's favor.

Big Scoring Period.

In the last quarter the score keepers must have worn their pencils out for the Y team went on a scoring rampage and the Saugerties players appeared as though they were just looking on. It was nothing short of a deluge of points that passed through the local team's hoop in this quarter. The score at the end of the game proved this for it was 65-22 with the Y team far in front.

Game Saturday Night.

Saturday night at the Y court the Y. M. C. A. team will play the Schenectady U. P. team, the fast quintet that beat "Pop" Hinds' well known Chandler team of last year four out of five games. The Mohawks and Wesley M. E. teams will play the preliminary.

Spinnys Ready For Monticello

Spinny's Radio-Five of Port Ewen is ready to take on the flashy Monticello quintet Thursday night at Pythian Hall, Port Ewen, in the regular weekly game. The boys are in good shape and expect to even matters with the team from the mountains, that now holds a 37-29 win over it.

There will be a preliminary which will start at 7:30. It will be finished by 8:30 when the feature will go on. Following the attraction there will be dancing with music by Maisenhelder's Commanders.

Kingston Again Meets Catskill

The Kingston High School varsity basketball squad will meet Catskill High School Friday night on the mountain team's court. It was but last Friday night that the Maroon squad defeated Catskill in the local school gym by a score of 39 to 19. Coach Kias' men displayed a fine brand of basketball in that struggle.

It seemed the defeat by the Rosmers inspired the local school team for its second game of the season was played in a most remarkable fashion. The high school's passwork was of the best and it yielded points that made its position safe throughout the contest. Besides having an offensive attack that could be classed with the best high school teams, they had a defense which was pierced but few times.

Coach Kias has barred long shots from his team's plays. This is one of the reasons why they have been successful in the past year. In place of these long shots is passwork which makes the Maroon's playing outstanding. With such an able leader as Captain Al Blackwell the squad is aiming at another DUSO League crown.

The annual Alumni and school varsity game will be played next Tuesday afternoon in the school gym. This is generally one of the outstanding exhibition games of the season. Last year the Alumni gave the varsity a 21 to 20 trimming but Coach Kias is in hopes that his men will turn the tide in this struggle. Former varsity men make up the Alumni squad and it will be a game worth the attention of the eyes of any basketball fan.

CHANGES SEEN IN FOOTBALL RULES

Grid Officials Favor Curb on Number of Subs.

Prominent football men, including several coaches, favor a new rule which would curb the wholesale use of substitutes during a game. It has become a practice that does not appeal to spectators who naturally are confused by the great number of changes made in the opposing lineups. Some of the smaller colleges which are limited to twenty-odd players or so are opposed to the methods of bigger and stronger rivals. In at least one instance a leading coach has used as many as thirty-five men in four periods of gridiron activity.

Unless a player is seriously injured, advocates of the proposed rule say he should be compelled to remain in his position from start to finish. In other days when halves of forty-five minutes each were played, it was customary for varsity teams to go through a whole game without calling in substitutes. No player could be withdrawn for a rest and then return to his place on the team. Football then was far more strenuous than the present game, which seems to be burdened with too many rules.

Probably there is no better proof of the utter futility of the so-called All-American football team than the difference of opinion about the all-conference team.

Numerous all-conference elevens have been printed and there has been a wide difference of opinion about at least two or three of the positions. The range of "error" is even greater among the lineups selected by the coaches, who follow the play of the teams more critically and more intimately than anybody else does.

Multiply the percentage of error in the various all-conference teams by the various sections of the country, and the All-American is lucky to get even two or three men right.

From a closed circuit like the Big Ten perhaps a fairly representative all-star can be selected sometimes, but the All-American is necessarily a good deal like a dog show in which chows, St. Bernards, collies and Boston Bulls are judged on a single standard.

Lawson Robertson, coach of the University of Pennsylvania track team, the cross-country runners of which won the Intercollegiate championship, said he would not care if the event as now run were scrapped at once.

"Don't congratulate me," said Robby, "congratulate the runners. It makes my heart ache that they had to punish themselves so much. It is gratifying to win the Intercollegiate title, but I rather wish cross country was not a part of college competition. These men are too young to withstand the torture one of these six-mile races calls for."

Car Struck by Switch Engine

George H. Dawkins of 145 Smith avenue, reported to the police department Tuesday night that his 1929 model Ford car was struck and wrecked by a switch engine on the Cornell street crossing of the Ulster & Delaware railroad. Mr. Dawkins reported he was driving east on Cornell street at the time, and that the switching engine was proceeding north. The crash occurred about 5:25 o'clock. No one was injured.

Ferryboat Was Lost in Fog

New York, Dec. 18 (AP)—A fog so dense that a ferryboat was lost for two hours in the East River disrupted harbor traffic today and held arrivers at anchor in the bay.

A thousand passengers returning from Europe after stormy voyages were forced to spend another night on the water when the ships were unable to reach their piers. Six hundred other persons bound for cruises in the West Indies, were delayed when their ships were forced to drop anchor down the bay after starting.

The municipal ferryboat William T. Collins with 25 passengers and a score of motor vehicles aboard, left her pier at East 92nd street at 7 p. m. bound for Astoria, Long Island. When after an hour she had failed to reach her destination, two police launches were sent out in search. Shortly after 9 o'clock word was received that the boat had reached a haven at Ward's Island in the East River.

Orpheum: "The Fall of Eve," with Patsy Ruth Miller and Ford Sterling. A risque comedy that is not as bad as it sounds.

Tomorrow.

Kingston: Same.

Broadway: "The Soul of France," French version of the pathos and horrors of the World War. No talking but musical accompaniment.

Orpheum: "The Long, Long Trail," Hoot Gibson rides and shoots after the style of the motion picture west.

OUR DAILY PATTERN.

A Stylish Coat Dress For Mature Figures With Slender Hips.

6659. Printed Silk in a small and pleasing pattern, was chosen for this outstanding design. One could also use printed crepe or satin crepe, or velvet, plain or printed. Asymmetric lines are featured here and graceful fulness is expressed in a group of plaits at the left side of the front. Tiny shoulder tucks trim the waist portion of the front, which is finished with a vestee in V outline, and lapped in surplice effect. The dress, closes at the left side of the front. The sleeve is a fitted model.

The pattern for this stylish design is cut in 8 sizes: 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52 inches bust measure and corresponding hip measure for slender hips. To make the dress for a 46 inch size will resuire 5 yards of 39 inch material. For vestee and belt of contrasting material ⅜ yard 39 inches wide is required cut crosswise. To finish with bias binding as pictured in the large view, will require 3¾ yards 1½ inch wide. The width of the dress at the lower edge with plait fulness extended is 2¼ yards.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 12c in coin or stamps by the Pattern Department, The Freeman, Kingston, N. Y. Be sure to state the size wanted.

They say every town in Greece claimed Homer, and only the other day we saw the paragraph, "All work and no play makes Jack," attributed to still another perspirer.

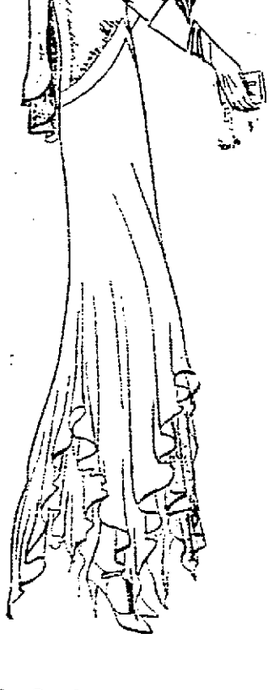
Eleanor Gunn On Fashions

The Elegant Gesture is Made With Gloved Hands.

New York.—To the formal, frock add elbow length gloves. This is the dictate of fashion this winter and no one steps out ungloved has the slightest excuse for doing so—if one lives by fashionable rules, changed each season as every one knows to one's sorrow.

One might have expected a spirit of rebellion from the younger, and one might assume more casual, set. Not at all. They were among the first to take up the gauntlet thrown down by fashion. Albeit shy of the sophisticated black glove, advanced by Paris, they adopted white glace kid or egg-shell suedes unreservedly.

The bodice which has an inverted V at the waistline has developed into an important one for the new season. It is one of the reasons for this talk of a renaissance of Empire lines.



The Capelet and Raised Waistline Interpreted in Rose Crepe.

(Copyright, 1929, by Fairchild.)

Possibly the reason for a rather sudden influx of capelet gowns may be found in the fact that such a line is more flattering to the average figure than a line with definitely defined waistline at the back, or even a molded princess. Capelets, boleros and berthas all continue to be shown, the former in such materials as are of a transparent nature, the latter in heavier silks and metal cloths.

The color range for evening has been greatly widened to include the lovely pastel tones to a list which already contained all the brilliant, and most of the so-called colors.

Black seems of minor importance excepting during the day.

Utility Ensemble for Formal Daytime Wear

Showing a chic cloth ensemble designed for formal daytime occasions. A rich blending of tan with brown lends much grace to its tailored lines. The cloth is a novelty woven fabric posing as an interwoven strand of the tan at frequent intervals on the dark background. Beaver collars the swagger coat. The bow treatment of the blouse is an interesting feature.

Crimes Charged To Fred Burke

Chicago, Dec. 18 (AP).—Many cities today cut new pages in the book of crime imputed to Fred Burke as the search for the alleged killer, kidnaper and bank robber became more intense.

The hunt for the former lieutenant of "Scarface Al" Capone still was centered in Chicago, with police seeking definitely to connect Burke with the massacre of the seven Moran gangsters last St. Valentine's Day. But many other chapters to the book were written elsewhere.

In Detroit, Burke was described as the man who taught the gunman to become the machine gunner; the man who gave lessons in kidnapping—who made a million from ransoms and robberies.

In addition, Inspector Henry J. Garvin, of the Detroit crime and bomb squad, called Burke the head of the "most desperate band of outlaws in the country—and not one of them, I believe, will ever be taken alive."

Meanwhile, recognition of Burke in a downtown Chicago hotel by a man who "used to play cards with him in St. Joseph, Mich.," where Burke posed as a gentleman of means, only bore out previous beliefs of Chicago police that Burke would seek hiding in this city—where police said he was once the expert machine gunner for the Capone gang and as such was in command at the Moran massacre.

The identification was made by William Hutchinson, of New Buffalo, Mich. "I could not have been mistaken," the Michigan man said. "I know him well. His eyes lighted on me and I knew in a flash that he recognized me. I got the impression he held a weapon and was prepared to shoot me if I tried to have him arrested."

All of the science of the experts in criminology was put in use by Chicago authorities to show that included in the arsenal found in the Burke home in St. Joseph was the machine gun used to massacre the Moran gangsters as they stood lined up against their death wall.

Major Calvin Goddard, famous ballistic expert from New York, was expected here today to determine if bullets found in the bodies of the Moran men were fired from this same machine gun.

Preliminary tests toward this end were made yesterday.

Citing some of the crimes charged to Burke and his gang, Detroit police listed the following—the total loot in which they place at a million dollars:

Kidnapping ransoms in Detroit over a period of eight years, $200,000; Kay jewelry robbery in Detroit, 1924, $6,000; United Railways holdup in St. Louis, $38,000; mail truck holdups in Toledo, Ohio, $200,000; bank robbery in Cadillac, Mich., $60,000; bank robbery in Peru, Ind., $93,000; bank robbery in Jefferson, Wis., $352,000.

Seven deaths in the Moran massacre; two killings in Detroit; one in the Toledo holdup—these are some of the murders charged to Burke.

The nation-wide search that disclosed this mammoth portrayal of crime was begun last Sunday following a traffic argument in St. Joseph, Mich. Burke was asked by Patrolman Charles Skelly to accompany him to the police station to "straighten out" a traffic tangle. Burke fatally shot Skelly—adding another to the list of dead.

Know Plant Habits, Gardeners Advised

Traits Must Be Known for Best Results in Crops.

The home gardener must be well acquainted with the characteristics of the plants he grows if he is to secure the best results for his efforts, advises the vegetable department of the college of agriculture at New Brunswick. The fault of our common vegetable plants which cannot be overlooked in any way is their sensitiveness to climatic conditions. Some vegetables require hot weather for their best development and are killed by a very light frost. Others do not develop properly during hot weather but will endure freezes. Each must be planted at a season of the year which will enable it to make its best development.

Of the cool season crops some reach edible maturity quickly, and are almost always grown without transplanting. In this group we find peas; the short-season root crops like radish, kohl-rabi, and turnip; the greens, such as spinach, mustard and kale; and the salad crops like leaf lettuce, garden cress and corn salad. These should be planted as soon as the danger of killing frosts is over.

Other cool season crops have a longer growing season than these, and must be started in a green-house, hot-bed or cold frame sometime before they could be sown outdoors if they are to mature before hot weather. Cabbage, cauliflower and head lettuce are in this class. The time to transplant these crops from the green-house to the field is as soon as the danger of killing frosts is past. Successive planting of some can be made up to the first of May, but after this date it is better to plant some of the warm season crops.

Fix Garden Tools Now, Save Time Next Spring

By properly taking care of the garden tools in the fall, hours of making ready in spring can be saved, says the November American Home. Rust has a knack of doing slow but effective damage and is the thing to be guarded against most carefully.

All metal work, and wood, too, can be rubbed with an oil-soaked rag. The oil used should be clean but not too light, for it must give a perfect covering through the winter. All bearings, too, can be kept shiny, such as the share of the garden plow or the hoe blade, coat the surface liberally with hard oil. This work is a dirty job and should be done in old clothes.

Should you find a tool badly rusted, a brick bat will be found an excellent thing to remove the rust. A fine grade of sand paper will also cut through nicely. This can be finished with emery cloth, although a buffing wheel turned at high speed with some emery powder on it will be the best to put on a highly polished surface that will "scour" when first used.

Alfalfa Will Furnish High-Grade Roughage

Among all the standard feed crops, alfalfa generally ranks at or near the top in dollar value per acre. A good crop of alfalfa hay yields from two to seven times as much digestible protein per acre as any of the farm crops commonly grown for live stock feed.

An alfalfa field on the farm will do more than furnish every class of live stock with the highest grade of roughage possible at a reasonable cost. With alfalfa hay available, other high yielding legumes can be used as pasture, or they can be plowed under as soil builders.

Alfalfa seeded in the fall requires a good seedbed, well pulverized and firm. The soil pulverizer is recognized as a good tool for crushing clods and for firming the soil before seeding.

Agricultural Squibs

Sheep are particular and will refuse left-overs.

Plenty of direct sunlight is an important factor in producing good gains in fall pigs.

Make repairs on your farm machinery now so that you won't have to waste valuable time later on.

• • •

A seed grower can build up his business and perhaps make splendid profits in the production of pure seed without exhibiting.

• • •

It does not pay to scatter straw of any kind on the field. It can best be used by making bedding for live stock and put back with manure.

• • •

The only way to handle green clover is to ensile it. Otherwise if it is made into hay it must be air-cured enough to insure housing it without much heating.

• • •

The use of the fanning mill for seed oats ordinarily pays well. The removal of chaff, light, shrunken grains, weed seeds, and dirt insures a more uniform rate of seeding, better germination, and a better yield.

• • •

If your home garden is composed of a heavy, stiff soil that has a tendency to become hard and form a crust after rains, it can be improved by turning under manure or any other vegetable matter. Coal ashes also are good but they add no fertility.

Pride and Vanity

Vanity is a confounded donkey, very apt to put his head between his legs and chuck us over; but pride is a fine horse, that will carry us over the ground, and enable us to distance our fellow-travelers.—Marryat.

Will Not Meet Soviet Envoy

London, Dec. 18 (AP).—The society gossip column of the London Daily Express today said there was much speculation as to the reason for delay of K. Sokolnikov, new Soviet ambassador, in presenting his credentials. The delay, it was said, was due to neither government, nor to M. Sokolnikov himself, but to King George's aversion to meeting the Soviet representative.

The writer said he understood the Prince of Wales would be deputized by King George to receive the ambassador from Moscow for presentation of his credentials, probably before Christmas.

Many Englishmen regard the execution of the Russian Czar Nicholas and other members of the royal family under the Soviet regime as unjustified. The czar was a cousin of King George. King George has not until now been confronted with necessity for recognition of a Soviet ambassador.

Rudolph Favored To Win.

Detroit, Dec. 18 (AP).—With six victories and no defeats to his credit today, Erwin Rudolph of Chicago was favorite to win the world's championship pocket billiard tournament, which ends tonight. Rudolph won his sixth straight and definitely eliminated Frank Taberski by beating the defending title holder last night 125 to 57 in 15 innings.

"Never Found Anything That Would Help Me Until I Tried Nu-Erb"

Declares Wall Street Lady Who Suffered From Indigestion, Backache and Nervousness.

"For the past two or three years, I have suffered from stomach, kidney and liver troubles and I have never found anything that would help me until I tried Nu-Erb," said Mrs. A. P. Speers, 317 Wall St., Kingston, N. Y. "It seemed as though even the lightest food caused indigestion after meals. I suffered from pain and distress through my stomach and sharp pains would shoot across my back. I'd get sick, bilious attacks, my nerves were in a very weakened condition and I scarcely knew what a good night's sleep was.

"The Nu-Erb has done more for me than anything I have ever used. It has relieved the indigestion, I am no longer troubled with backache, my kidneys are apparently in first rate condition and the biliousness is also a thing of the past. My nerves are steady, I sleep soundly at night and I am feeling stronger and better in every way."

Dr. French's Nu-Erb, the great herbal medicine that did so much for this party is made from the pure liquid extracts of twelve medicinal herbs, roots, barks and leaves which act on the stomach to assist it in digesting the food, strengthen weak kidneys, rouse a lazy liver to full action, relieve constipation, quiet the nerves, purify the blood and drive poisonous waste matter from the system. Nu-Erb is pleasant to take and the results are quickly felt.

McBride Drug Store, 312 Wall St., is headquarters in Kingston for Dr. French's Nu-Erb. Go see the Nu-Erb man now making his headquarters there and let him explain to you the merits of this remarkable medicine.
